Swine website upgraded

Kansas State University has updated its swine website to offer more information and easier navigation for users.

"The old web page was hard to find and not as user-friendly as we thought it could be," said Bob Goodband, K-State Research and Extension swine specialist.

The site has a new URL — http://www.KSUswine.org — that should be easier to remember and access, Goodband said.

Some of the site changes include the addition of several spreadsheets. They allow producers to evaluate the economics of different feed ingredients, as well as to determine the optimal weight for marketing pigs.

Other features include proper feeder adjustment cards, premix recommendations, and K- State´s updated "Swine Nutrition Guide."

"The reports in our most recent annual Swine Day publication have also been categorized, so data will be easier to find," Goodband said.

High harvest prices expected because of fuel costs

WICHITA (AP) — Custom cutters and farmers alike are bracing for what will likely be the most expensive winter wheat harvest ever amid record high fuel prices.

Winter wheat harvest is now under way in states like Texas and Oklahoma.

Steve Shepherd, president of U.S. Custom Harvesters, an industry trade group, said custom cutters don't even know how much to charge farmers this year amid rising costs. He suspects there will be hard feelings.

"Our costs are so high and farmers are going to be against it. Everything went up," said Shepherd, of Onida, S.D., who has been harvesting crops in Arizona and California for three weeks. In that time, gas prices have risen 65 cents a gallon, he said.

And it's not just fuel that is going up — equipment and other costs are increasing as well.

"It is going to be the most costly harvest," said Kevin Dhuyvetter, a Kansas State University agricultural economist who produces the U.S. Custom Harvester's annual Custom Harvester Analysis and Management Program report.

Farmers can expect to pay between $7 and $10 per acre more to cut their wheat this year compared with a year ago, said Robert Belt, a custom cutter from Kingman.

The cost of custom cutting is figured based on negotiated prices for cutting and hauling the crop per acre, and considers the yields in the calculations. And then there is the fuel surcharge. All told, it may cost farmers around $35 per acre to cut a typical 40-bushel-per-acre field, Belt said.

He said he spends between $3,000 and $4,000 a day in fuel to run his five combines, which doesn't include the gas he puts into the grain trucks that haul the crops to elevators.

This season's harvest costs will be eased somewhat by the soaring prices farmers are getting for those crops.

Farmers who have normal yields this year — and sell their crop at current prices of around $7.50 a bushel — are going to make money, Dhuyvetter said.

Winter wheat is seeded in the fall for harvest the following summer. It has become popular because it saves farmers time in the spring, and yields have been strong in recent years. Also, prices have moved closer to those for spring wheat after years of running behind.

With the harvest at least three weeks away in Kansas, some farmers here are also concerned about whether there will be enough custom cutters to harvest the wheat crop in a timely fashion.

Cool, wet weather has delayed crop maturity in southern counties where the harvest typically begins, said Dusti Fritz, chief executive officer for Kansas Wheat, a venture of the Kansas Wheat Commission and the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers.

"We are probably going to be harvesting in all four corners of the state at the same time," Fritz said.

Cull cows: an income source worth managing

By Dr. Cathy Bandyk

For most cow/calf operations, sale of cull cows represents 15-25% of yearly gross revenues. These marketings also account for 10% of the federally inspected beef slaughter. Yet many producers fail to consider options that could help them maximize their net returns on these animals. One practice that can in many (but not all) situations improve profit is placing cull cows on feed for a limited time prior to sale.

This strategy hinges on three key points: Thin to moderate condition cows can gain weight efficiently; There are significant price advantages to managing cows into a higher quality grade; Consistent seasonal trends in market price offer higher cow prices in spring than in fall.

The 1999 National Market Cow and Bull Beef Quality Audit showed that, on average, almost $70 was being left on the table for each cull cow sold. Of this, their analysis showed that receipts would increase $27.50 per head if health and condition were better monitored (selling cows before joint and eye problems become too advanced, and feeding cows to adequate muscling), and another $27.50 if the animals were marketed in a more timely manner. This message is not new; the 1994 audit report concluded at that time that feeding cull cows a concentrate diet before slaughter would net an additional $20 per animal.

Research at Colorado State University showed that time on-feed improved both tenderness and yields of cow carcasses, without leading to excessive external fat deposits. They did find that the feeding period needed to be at least 7 or 8 weeks long to have a significant impact on tenderness, although gains improved immediately, and marbling was increased in just 4 weeks. Feeding a high-concentrate diet before slaughter also improves (whitens) the fat color in these cows.

Exact nutrient specifications for fed cows are not well defined, but Texas workers did prove the importance of supplying adequate protein to support rapid gains. In a 57-day feeding period, cows received a concentrate diet (.9% urea) with graded levels of cottonseed meal. Treatments were 11.5, 13.0 and 14.5% crude protein(CP), which translated into 7, 8.5, and 10% rumen-degradable protein(DIP). As CP and DIP increased, average daily gains improved from 2.71 to 2.73 to 2.99 lb/hd/day, a 10% increase. Dry matter intakes also rose 3% (from 20.25 to 20.5 to 21 lb/hd/day), while feed efficiency did not change.

There may be situations where it makes more sense to put additional gains on cows with forage and supplements, rather than a finishing-type ration. Again, protein level is important. This strategy was tested in Florida , where 12.5% CP hay was fed with various supplements. Simply supplying additional energy in the form of citrus pulp or molasses increased daily gains through the winter, but supplying molasses plus a supplemental protein source (in this case, cottonseed meal), further increased gains, as well as yielding improvements in carcass weight, marbling score, quality grade, dressing percent, and fat color.

Cow body condition score can be a good indicator of the potential value of putting cull cows on feed before slaughter. A study in Arkansas showed the relationship between BCS and quality grade, as well as net carcass value. Hot carcass weight, dressing %, fat thickness, ribeye area, and yield grade all improved as BCS increased from 2 to 8. All BCS 2 cows graded U.S. Cutter or lower; all BCS 7 and 8 cows were U.S. Utility. In this study, cows with a condition score of 6 represented optimal economic returns to both producers and packers (3/4 graded Utility, with minimal fat trim needed).

The value of feeding cows to a higher quality grade was also addressed in some South Dakota work. After evaluating historic data to quantify the average price spread between Canner, Cutter, and Utility cow carcasses, they ran a trial to determine impact of days on feed on carcass quality grade.

While it is obvious we can increase the carcass value of cull cows by putting them on feed, this improvement may or may not be enough to offset the costs of retained ownership and feeding. Another factor that must be considered is the seasonality of cow prices

Iowa statistics show a historic 12% jump in prices from November to February, while Louisiana research indicated a 12-year average increase for that same time frame of $6.17/cwt. The decision to feed cull cows needs to be based on seasonal price expectations, the price difference between quality grades, the cost of feeding (including interest), and potential for improved value in a specific group of cows.

Only plan to feed sound, healthy cows in thin to moderate condition, and feed and manage for fast, efficient gains (nutrient-dense diet, implants, ionophores). When the decision is made to hold and feed culls, liquid supplements can fit a wide range of feeding scenarios. If cows are to receive a forage-based diet, traditional liquids will supply needed degradable protein and sugar energy to maximize diet utilization and performance. "Complete" supplements can bring balanced nutrition, palatability, diet uniformity, and maximized gains and efficiency to bunk rations.

Harvester itineraries include lengthy trips through Midwest

ALDEN (AP) — Alex Mazur has longed for adventure on the Great Plains of America.

His eyes flicker with excitement, like a boy with a new bicycle, as he looks up at a large combine at the shop located in the middle of Alden — thousands of miles from his native Scotland.

"It's a love of these big-boys toys," the 20-year-old said with a grin. "I can't wait to get started."

He heeded the call and joined a wheat harvesting crew that will make its way from the Texas/Oklahoma border to North Dakota. His plan is to see the world, or at least the Midwest prairie, from atop one of those John Deere machines.

So, on a late spring morning, with fields of wheat in Kansas still green, Mazur and nearly 30 others with Frederick Harvesting packed up their belongings. A caravan of 10 combines, 14 trucks and five campers prepared to leave the small Rice County town of Alden, population 168, and head south to Altus and Temple, Okla., to begin cutting wheat at the first stop on the roughly 1,500-mile trip.

They'll end the wheat leg around Labor Day at Minot, N.D. — 60 miles from the Canada border.

Then it will start over as fall harvest begins.

Brothers Lance and Drew Frederick aren't much different from other custom harvesters.

A generation removed from the family farm, Lance started cutting wheat for others in 1983 as a way to get into farming.

His brother joined him a few years later.

They've answered the call of the harvest since, following the rhythm of the ripening wheat through Oklahoma, Kansas, Colorado, Montana and the Dakotas.

Today, Frederick Harvesting is run by Drew, 44, and Lance, 46, and their two families. Typically, they're not together on most jobs, sometimes more than 100 miles apart, splitting up the machinery.

Lance's wife, Lynette, helps run the operation and keeps everyone fed. Daughters Kassi, 18, and Karly, 13, also help bring in wheat and cook meals.

Drew's wife, Connie, also comes along and cooks. The couple's 19-year-old sons, identical twins Zach and Zayn, each operates his own combine, machines labeled No. 1 and No. 2.

Zach drives No. 1. He's a minute older.

An additional 23 people are employees. About 45 percent are foreign workers from Scotland, Australia, England, Ireland, Northern Ireland and Belgium.

They'll be part of about 350 custom harvest crews to make the long haul north, a number that has dwindled in the past 20 years

The number of people in the custom harvest profession — a career typically passed down through generations — continues to diminish.

The first mass exodus happened after the 2002 drought.

Back in the early 1990s, more than 1,000 crews made the trip, said Pam Shmidl, operations manager for U.S. Custom Harvesters, an agency based in Hutchinson.

It's not an easy lifestyle.

When it's time to cut, you cut. There is no 5 o'clock quitting bell. It doesn't matter if temperatures soar to the triple digits or the wind is blowing a little too hard.

Ripe grain waits for no one.

"It's daylight to 2 in the morning — whatever it takes to get the crop in," Lance Frederick said.

Racing Mother Nature is the name of the game, he said. He doesn't fault those who have called it quits.

"It's a tough life," Lance said. "It's a very hard way to make a living."

In the past few years, equipment prices have skyrocketed. Fuel prices have more than doubled. There is more red tape to get foreign workers to the United States. Now the federal government wants stricter requirements for a commercial driver's license, he said.

The changes would require a minimum 76 hours of classroom instruction and 44 hours behind the wheel just to apply for a Class A CDL, which is required to drive a semi.

If it happens, the rule would take effect in three years.

Part of the problem, however, is employees change each year. Some come back, but most don't.

The U.S. Custom Harvesters Association estimated training and licensing cost at $4,000 per driver.

"Some would go out of business overnight," Lance said of other cutters. "We'd probably still be here, but we'd cut back."

Then who would be left to cut the millions of acres of commodities that spread across the rural Midwest, he asks. That issue is still a few years away.

Now his concerns turn toward the crops ripening in the fields. He hopes he has some wheat to harvest.

Old-timers say North Dakota is the driest it's been in nearly 50 years.

As farmers there finish planting spring wheat, the lack of rain has Lance Frederick worried.

Minot, the last stop on the trip, is in the middle of an extreme drought.

If there is no wheat to cut, he doesn't make money. And he still has nearly 30 mouths to feed.

It's the same situation at other stops. The crop is drought-plagued near Plains, Kan. — the first stop for Lance in the Sunflower State. Two stops in eastern Colorado — Platner and Cheyenne Wells — are amid moderate droughts, as well.

"I'm worried about Colorado," he said, noting that last year the crew cut a phenomenal harvest across the Wheat Belt. "One year you have a good crop at a farm, the next year, nothing."

Last year at Plains, the wheat crop averaged 73 bushels an acre.

Their farm at Rice County, however, should be in good shape, Drew Frederick said. He'll bring his part of the crew back to Alden to cut it.

Drew said 2006 was the worst harvest he experienced, thanks to drought.

Yet that is the way of the world of anyone in agriculture. Inclement weather means a variable paycheck.

"It has its up and its downs," Drew said, noting he still enjoys it. When he first started, "it was the closest thing to farming we could do."

New combines sit in a half circle beside a few grain bins on the outskirts of Alden. Zach and Zayn Frederick have been working to get them ready to go.

They've been ready to go on the next harvest trip since they returned last year to start their first year at Hutchinson Community College. They've been on a harvest all 19 years of their life.

Now they're preparing for their 20th harvest.

"We always look forward to it every year," Zach said. "There's something about it that gets you excited."

Maybe it's the new crop situated before them or being with family. Or maybe it's just that their father's love of the land runs deeply through their veins.

Zach and Zayn's first harvest was the summer of 1989. They were just 8 months old. They rode around in the combine, strapped tightly in the passenger seat.

The boys recall going to the pool during a couple stops along the trail when they were younger. Mostly, however, they spent the days riding in the combine with their dad or with other crew members.

They were in junior high when they started driving machinery.

They didn't miss the summer ball games back home, the Fourth of July celebrations or anything else.

"We didn't play baseball," said Zach.

At Sterling High School, they participated in cross country and track.

Now they go to college, but come home every evening to help their father on the farm. In a year, they'll enroll at Kansas State University. But their plan is to come back to the farm, as well as help operate the family's custom harvest business.

"A lot of people don't get to work with their dad," Zayn said, saying he thought the custom harvest experience has made their family close-knit.

Their father, Drew, said he wants them to be happy, even if they choose to come back to a way of life that isn't always easy.

"I want them to enjoy whatever they do," Drew said.

"I'm ready to get started"

With a week left before they leave, crew members finish polishing and repairing farm trucks, combines and other machinery. Decals that read Frederick Harvesting are put on the new combines.

Lance Frederick's cell phone keeps ringing. So does the office phone. Dealers call with parts. Fuel suppliers call about deliveries. Frederick said he spends hundreds of thousands of dollars each year in supplies to get ready for the trip.

He looks out his office door at the sundry of activity. Much of his crew arrived in mid-April to help prepare for the work. They took driving tests and practiced loading and unloading combines. They even practiced hauling grain from Alden's elevator.

But there still is much to do, Lance said. Downtime is rare.

Since fall harvest ended around Thanksgiving, Drew and Lance, their families and a few full-time employees have been busy getting everything ready for the 2008 trek.

Crew members began leaving Monday. Drew was to leave Wednesday. Lance said was leaving Friday.

"Every day this week combines will be moving south," Lance Frederick said.

Twenty-five harvests have passed. Despite the stress, Lance is ready for the next one.

New time for the Barton county wheat plot tour

Come one, come all to the annual Barton County Extension wheat plot tour! The county wheat plot tour will be held on Friday, June 6, beginning at 7 a.m. However, you can come as late as 11a..m. that morning and still get in on some of the action.

There are a couple of new things this year. One is the late date. This is the latest that the tour has ever been held in Barton County. This is because of the slow maturity and anticipated late harvest. The second new thing is the morning time instead of evening. We felt like you could get to the tour, get some food and then have the rest of the day to work.

The tour will begin at 7 a.m. at the 4-H plot of Eric Blakeslee, located just 1/4 of a mile north of Ellinwood on NE 110 Road. It will be on the west side of the blacktop road. If you turn north on Hirsch Street, by John Henry´s on the east edge of Ellinwood, it´s just 3/4 of a mile north of Highway 56, which is also Sante Fe Blvd.

There are 5 varieties in his plot and we will only be there about 20 minutes. Our next stop will be the 4-H plot on Colin Miller. It is roughly 5 miles straight north of the first stop. It is just one-half mile north of the old St. Peter and Paul Church, on the west side of the road. He has those same 5 varieties and we will be there from 7:25 or 7:30 until around 7:45.

The next stop will be breakfast. It will begin at 8 a.m. Meet for that at the Claflin Community Center, 208 2nd Street in Claflin. At around 9 a.m., we will be at our largest plot on the Richard Rugan farm, 3 miles south and 2.5 west of Claflin. If you are coming from the south it is 1.7 miles north of Highway 156 on NE 100 Ave. We have 24 different varieties in this plot. We will be there until around 10:15.

From the Claflin plot, we will travel 33 miles to the northwest to our plot, 2 miles west of Galatia.

We will have several excellent speakers along on the tour. Brian Olson, northwest area agronomist for K-State Research and Extension, based out of Colby, will be on hand. Also, Dan O´Brien, northwest agricultural economist will touch on the wheat market and crop budgets. Erick DeWolf, K-State plant pathologist will talk about wheat diseases. Greg McCormick, business manager for Agri-Pro Seeds will be here, as will representatives from Westbred and other private companies to discuss their products.

If you plan to eat either breakfast or lunch or even both, please give me a call at (620) 793-1910.

Rural citizens seek to solve REAL problems with K-State help

Nine rural Kansas citizens launched an innovative program in mid-May aimed at helping Kansas leaders identify and solve key issues in their home communities.

"The goal of the program is helping local leaders find REAL solutions to community problems," said Ron Wilson, program coordinator. "In this case, REAL is an acronym for Rural Engagement and Action Leadership. I don´t know of any other program like it in the country."

"The REAL Project is intended to help graduates of leadership programs apply their leadership skills back home," Wilson said. "We are pleased with these nine outstanding Kansans and the issues they have identified."

The nine Kansans and the issues they have identified are as follows: Louise Berning, Scott City — enhance conservation measures for western Kansas electric consumers; David Coltrain, LaCrosse — use all segments of the population to inventory community development capitals in the Walnut Creek Extension District; Doug Gerber, Beloit — improve entrances to Beloit to promote the community; Mark Goehring, Baxter Springs — help rejuvenate the local chamber of commerce to build a better Baxter Springs; Richard Jackson, Ottawa — develop a county-wide vision and citizen participation plan in Franklin County; Barbara Lilyhorn, S. Hutchinson — help western Reno County communities work together on common concerns involving public health, safety and economic development through shared resources; Dan Peters, Onaga — address key issues such as youth entrepreneurship and mentoring; Larie Schoap, Emporia — enhance "Building Futures," the blueprint for creating a better Emporia; and Lea Ann Seiler, Jetmore — enhance a climate of collaboration in Hodgeman County.

"Each of these citizens was selected to be a part of the REAL Project based on their past participation in such programs as Leadership Kansas, Kansas Agriculture and Rural Leadership, Kansas Environmental Leadership Program, and the National Extension Leadership Program," Wilson said. "Each will receive a $500 mini-grant to help them address their issue, plus we will seek to engage Kansas State University expertise to assist them."

A workshop for REAL Project participants was held at the Eisenhower Presidential Library and Museum in Abilene on May 20-21, 2008. Participants received training in leadership, issue identification and community improvement processes. During the next twelve months, participants will work on the issues they have identified. The REAL Project was funded by an engagement incentive grant from the K-State Center for Engagement and Community Development.

The REAL Project is facilitated by a team consisting of Ron Wilson from the Huck Boyd National Institute for Rural Development, Donita Whitney-Bammerlin of K-State´s Department of Management, Assistant Dean Tom Roberts of K-State´s College of Engineering, Jack Lindquist of the Kansas Agriculture and Rural Leadership Program, David Coltrain of K-State Research and Extension — Walnut Creek District, and Racquel Thiesen of Newton, President of the Kansas Leadership Forum.

"We believe these citizens can make a REAL difference in their communities back home," Wilson said. More information can be found at www.getrealks.org.

NCGA debuts new food and fuel resource center

As a disinformation campaign against corn ethanol continues with enormous funding from special interests, the National Corn Growers Association has created an Internet resource center that focuses squarely on the "food versus fuel" issue. Not only can farmers produce more than enough corn for all needs, but that other factors such as high energy costs have much more impact on global food inflation and shortages.

"Corn growers are sick and tired of being accused of crimes against humanity and of causing starvation in Africa," said Rick Tolman, NCGA's chief executive officer. "These statements are not only egregious and offensive, but they ignore the facts, and our resource center is one part of a truth campaign we've been waging for some time now."

The Food and Fuel Resource Center includes links to the latest research on corn ethanol issues as well as news articles, testimony, presentations, white papers, fact sheets, Web site links and quotes. It will be updated on a regular basis and offer a positive but strong response to critics of the U.S. corn and ethanol industries while stressing the many benefits ethanol provides for the domestic economy, energy security and sustainability.

"It's easy to be overloaded with information," Tolman said. "But it's important to have the right information, easily accessible. And that's our goal here."

Yard & Garden Tips

Free Landscape Plants

The Easter freeze of 2007 is still being felt. I suspect more plants will die this year from that cold spell. There are reminders every day in our landscape where plants died and haven't been replaced. Now would be a good time to do something about that.

Plants that survived the freeze must be good ones. Purchasing like plants from the nursery is one way to add to the landscape. Another option is to propagate your own. If you have patients and a green thumb, you can take stem cuttings from your own plants and root them.

Cuttings from different plants can vary greatly in their capacity to form roots. Some root with ease and others are hard to impossible. Timing for taking the cutting and the hormone strength are two variables that lead to success.

Most deciduous shrubs root best when cuttings are taken in June or July. You will need four to six inches of new growth cut from the desired plant. Generally, the in between growth cells are most likely to cooperate and change into roots. Older cells are stuck in their way of working and new growth cells are just trying to do as their told.

Remove the lower leaves so that only stem tissue will be the rooting media. All other leaves are left to produce energy for rooting and new growth. The basal cut may be made slanted or straight which is the end going into the rooting media. Easily rooted cuttings can go straight into the media usually made up of sand and peat moss.

Woodier looking cuttings will benefit by stirring the wet cut end in a rooting hormone available from a nursery. Remove the excess hormone by tapping the stem and having the extra hormone fall back in to the container. Place the cuttings and media in a shaded location. Temperature in the 70's is ideal for rooting. The rooting media must not be allowed to become dry but it also must drain away excess moisture.

I cover my cuttings with clear plastic which is supported to keep it off the plants. This cover aids in keeping a high humidity around the plants. It is important to check on the cuttings to be sure the moisture is just right for development. Once you notice new growth coming from the cutting, you can bet that roots have formed.

Plants have been propagated like this for a long time. Sometimes it goes well and others time it doesn't quite work out. When it does, you have free plants to use in the landscape.

You can find out more information on gardening by going to Riley County's K-State Research and Extension website at www.riley.ksu.edu or you may contact Gregg Eyestone at the Riley County office of K-State Research and Extension by calling 537-6350 or stopping by 110 Courthouse Plaza in Manhattan or e-mail: geye ston@ksu.edu

Oak galls a gallingly complex problem

Many of nature´s tiny flies, mites and non-stinging wasps love oak- furnished nurseries. They represent hundreds of insect species, all of which lay eggs on oak trees.

"Tree owners get concerned every spring, seeing the effects of this abundance," said Ward Upham, Master Gardener program coordinator for Kansas State University Research and Extension.

Owners´ worry is that the insects also inject the host tree with a growth-regulating chemical. The oak itself reacts, and the result on the tree is an abnormal growth — a gall — for every insect offspring.

"Depending on the oak variety and its location, galls can show up on a tree´s leaves, twigs, stems, buds, flowers or bark. Occasionally, they´re on acorns and roots," Upham said. "We´re just lucky that most gall-maker insects don´t cause significant tree damage."

Galls can cause enough leaf deformity, however, to make a tree unsightly, the horticulturist added. Severe twig-gall infestations can cause twig dieback. But, even that rarely leads to tree death.

"I´ve seen twigs that looked like a solid mass of galls, yet still leafed out in spring," he said.

Galls can be round, lumpy, dish-shaped, spiny, flattened, elongated or star-shaped. Although many are in the BB to gumdrop range, their size can range from a fraction of an inch to several inches.

Each gall-maker species produces its own particular shape, size and color of gall. In turn, each gall serves as a hatchling´s cover and sole food source until the larva pupates into an adult, Upham said.

"If the timing for all this seems a bit vague, the reason is the amount we still don´t know about gall makers," he said. "In North America alone, we´ve documented more than 700 species of gall wasp."

In fact, their protected young and life cycle variations make controlling gall-makers impossible.

"You can prune off stem and twig galls, if that seems practical and necessary," Upham said. "Otherwise, your best course is to try to ignore the problem or perhaps trim to improve tree appearance."
