Livestock auctioneer, radio voice retiring

By Frank J. Buchman

Sure have been lots of changes in the livestock business in the past six-plus decades.

There have been many transformations in the auction and sale barn industries as well.

One thing hasn't changed. "Auctions are still the best way to get the top dollar for your livestock, or whatever you want to sell," contended Col. Roger Johnson, Salina.

Certainly, if there is anyone who would know, it is Col. Johnson, a lifelong stockman.

Johnson started working at the Lindsborg Sale Barn as a teenager, became an auctioneer 44 years ago and, at age 76, is planning retirement from 40 years of employment at Farmers & Ranchers Livestock Commission Company, Inc., Salina.

Retirement recognition is planned at the barn Thursday, March 27, with a special invitation extended to all friends and customers. Refreshments will be served throughout the day.

"The biggest change I've seen has been the sharply lowered number of farmers and the much larger size of operations," Johnson insisted. "Used to be every corner had a farmstead. Farmers had a few cows and hogs, would market their livestock at the local sale barn, which most of the small communities had back

"Farmers used to feed out their cattle, usually a couple dozen on a typical farm. If they had twice that many, it was considered a big operation. Sale barns would sell a few hundred head of livestock a week and make a good living," Johnson continued. "Now farmers must have hundreds of head to make a go of it, and larger auction barns often sell several thousand cattle in a

Not only has Johnson been an auctioneer at the Salina pavilion, he's also served as a fieldman, visiting stockmen over a wide area, providing an approximate weight of their livestock and giving an estimate of what they will sell for at auction.

"I'd always spend at least two days a week in the country looking at cattle," Johnson reflected.

While he's recognized as a leading livestock auctioneer throughout the Midwest, it's for his livestock market reports on the radio that Johnson is probably known by the greatest number of people. "I've had a livestock market program on KSAL radio Monday through Friday mornings at 6:45, ever since I started here," Johnson

Those are live reports right from his office in the sale barn. Additionally,

Johnson has programs on KRVN and KFRM on Wednesday and Thursday mornings.

"Sometimes I have wondered if anybody was listening, but then if I say something wrong, everybody has to make sure I know it," Johnson revealed. "There was a woman who saw me in Salina one day, and said I was the best thing that ever happened to her.

"She told me she always has her radio on in the morning, but doesn't like to get up. Then when I come on, she can't stand listening to me, so she gets up so she won't have to," Johnson grinned.

Stepping down from his duties at Farmers & Ranchers Livestock won't leave Johnson with too much idle time. "I'll still be in the auction business, and we have quite a few sales lined up this spring," he admitted.

There was a time when Johnson would have 70-plus farm and other miscellaneous auctions annually, in addition to selling 100 days at the livestock pavilion.

Growing up on a diversified farm near Lindsborg, Johnson found he could work at the sale barn in town during high school and be excused from school. "I was just an alley boy then, but the auction and sale barn bug bit me pretty hard, because that's what I decided I wanted to do," he verified.

Col. Roger Johnson visited with Farmers & Ranchers Livestock Commission Company manager Mike Samples last week in the lobby of the Salina auction pavilion where Johnson has worked 40 years. A retirement celebration, with refreshments and lots of reminiscing, is scheduled Thursday, March 27, during the regular twiceweekly auction.

Entry into the business wasn't immediate though. Drafted into the Army during the Korean War, Johnson served in Spokane, Wash. Upon return with his wife, Lynne, and their first son, Johnson pursued his career choice.

"I asked Lonnie Wilson, who was running the Wilson Livestock Auction in Salina, if I could go to work for him," Johnson reminisced. "He said no at first, but changed his mind, and I started auctioneering there. I was plenty green."

However, Johnson did later attend the Reisch Auction School in Mason City, Iowa, continued selling at Wilson and was soon asked to conduct farm and household auctions. "One day I came out of the barn, and there waiting for me in a car were two of the owners of Farmers & Ranchers. They'd built this new barn in '64. I believe it was, and they asked me to work for them.

"Laurence Clemence, Merrill Christiansen and Bob Muir owned it then. I started the next Monday. I've been here and on the radio ever since," Johnson calcu-

Along with his auction career, Johnson has always been involved in his own farming and livestock operations. "I have the home farm at Lindsborg and also own

Riley County couple honored as Kansas Master Farmer, Farm Homemaker

By Kathleen Ward

Bob and Mary Mertz met in 1981 in her hometown of Chicago. Both were in the same department of the National Live Stock and Meat Board. They soon became known as the coworkers who were always butting heads ... for years.

He was a Kansas farm boy who'd come to direct efforts on state beef checkoff programs (pre today's $1 national checkoff). She was an administrative coordinator who'd never seen a farm.

In one of those strangerthan-fiction developments. however, they finally did become friends. And, that opened the way to a life together that's now earned the couple a 2007 Kansas Master Farmer-Master Farm Homemaker Award.

The award honors those who have made a lifetime commitment to community service, environmental stewardship and agricultural leadership. It comes from Kansas State University Research and Extension and the Kansas Farmer Magazine, which each year select six couples from across Kansas.

Mary and Bob Mertz, Manhattan, have been selected as one of the six couples to be honored in 2008 as Master Farmer-Homemakers.

The 2007 winners will receive their award during a March 21, 2008 banquet in Junction City.

Today the Mertzes are the kind of family that at times has unusual visitors at their dinner table. Two years ago, they hosted a delegation that included China's directors of agriculture and com-

One of last year's groups was legislative staff aides, who sat around the table discussing farm issues. Their visit probably resulted from the fact Bob has been president of the National Lamb Feeders Association and an advisor to its leadership school. Plus, he's currently a Kansas-elected member of Vote FBF (Farm Bureau Friend). That committee visits with and evaluates state and federal political candidates and monetarily supports those who are pro agriculture and rural communi-

Over the Barn Gate

By Beth Gaines-Riffel

The change can happen quickly. In fact, from night to morning the change is obvious. And I, for one, am glad to see it happen. What, you might ask? The greening of the wheat and the hopeful arrival of warmer days.

I marvel annually at how fast this transition happens. It has an almost magical quality to it. And this year with Easter being so early, it was fitting that the change happened last week in the midst of Holy Week and the official arival of spring. And let me tell you, I'm not the only one who has noticed the sprouts of enticing green, poking up through the layers of brown, dried grasses. A few of the more athletically inclined momma cows — i.e. the fence jumpers have also got a hankering for the lush grasses now

Sometimes in the daily 'busyness' of farming and ranching, it is easy to miss the transformations that happen right before our eyes. Sort of like the frog that gets cooked by being placed in a pot of cold water and slowly warmed, bit by bit until the point of no return is reached.

Calves suddenly arrive at market weight, wheat goes from green to ripe and the cycle continues.

I'm thankful that I have the opportunity to take part in the process. I honestly can't imagine not being able to watch it.

This week is the Salina Farm Show — as always we'll be stationed in lobby, ready to visit and take care of the business of subscription renewals and even sell you a G&G cookbook or two.

A special attraction will be the book signing by Gordon Morrison on Wednesday, from 2-4 p.m. I hope you'll take the opportunity to stop by and meet the G&G columnist during this time. This will be the only time during the farm show that his book, Views from the Learning Post will be offered for sale.

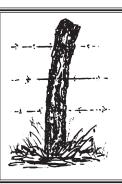

So, there you have it, I've got a big case of spring fever and I'm looking forward to the Farm Show in Salina. That's all for now and I'll chat with you next week, "Over the Barn

Coping With Uncertain Times

Who would have dreamed a year that the price of wheat would hit the $12 mark and above? It is hard to make an accurate guess as to which direction the markets will take next month, next week, or even tomor-

I have observed that whenever there is a pot of money within reach, there are some who will jockey around, trying to figure out how they can get their hands on it. I guess it is only natural and probably lawful to do so, but in the scramble, often there are some who get hurt financially and sometimes rather severely. With grain prices soaring unbelievably high, there could be a huge pot of money for all agribusinesses to scramble for. As is often said, if it's not in the bin, one cannot count it yet. Even when it is in the bin, it has to be marketed and the money collected. Business has gotten so big and complex, one can be left holding the bag if he is not really savvy.

Being on the county conservation district board, I realize that some farmers are plowing up their pasture lands and CRP grass in order to cash in on $10 or $11 could cause one to be in noncompliance for any government payments. Besides, there is no guarantee these extremely high prices will last. The Natural Resources Conservation Service would be a good place to visit before hooking onto one's plow.

Reports are that several farmers western Kansas are unable to cash in on their 2007 wheat and corn crops because their grain is tied up in elevators of a business that is defunct. Chapter 7 involuntary bankruptcy proceedings are being pursued by creditors who are trying to recover money loaned to the business. This could be a lengthy process and the outcome uncertain. Situations such as this make me leery about the markets and the economy. I believe it is important to plan a strategy for avoiding unnecessary risks and to survive.

Below are a few suggestions; no doubt, you can add to the list.

(1) Don't be greedy and try for a home run to get rich quick; a sure hit to first may be safer.

(2) Be a good steward of your ago or at harvest time last summer land. Don't break out virgin soil for a flash-in-the-pan scheme and then regret it when you have to protect it with costly soil conservation practices to keep it from eroding and to comply with the program.

> (3) Use the expertise of the SCS people to ensure good conservation practices.

> (4) When the markets are so extremely volatile and uncertain, exercise caution when marketing grains through commodity contracts.

> (5) Plan to sell at three or four different times to obtain a good average in price. Sell at a price you can live with and be satisfied. No doubt, many farmers have sold part of their 2008 wheat crop at what seemed a good price only to see it continue to soar higher.

> (6) A long delay for income tax purposes for taking payment for grain sold may be risky. The returns on your hard work, if not collected, can be a temptation for those who are hard pressed.

> (7) If you are buying grains for feed, pay for it only after you have received shipment.

(8) Watch the condition of your wheat. Some of these fields may be home-stored grains, especially when fragile and highly erodible, which it warms up. Check your bins often and treat or repair for safe storage.

> (9) If you possibly can, deal with people you know and trust. Be trustworthy yourself.

> (10) Operate under written agreements rather than verbal ones.

> (11) Stay diversified and think twice before double-cropping; it often does not pay.

> It is time agribusinesses, farmers, and ranchers stopped cannibalizing one another and drop the slogan, "the survival of the fittest"; instead, be fair in this business of agriculture.

Johnson retires after 40 years of service to Salina auction market

Continued from page 1 some additional pasture land," Johnson qualified. "I always kept a cow herd, put up the feed and took care of the cows myself until the mid-'80s, when we started having so many auctions I couldn't keep up with it all."

His agricultural operations are now leased out, but Johnson remains involved in upkeep. "There are always thistles to pull and fence to fix, and I know where the good fishing holes are. I'll be spending more time doing that now that I'm retiring here," he declared.

The Johnsons have lived in Salina since the mid-'50s, raising four sons, and now they have seven grandchildren. "My wife has become the head babysitter," he acknowledged.

'Our boys still had to work on the farm when they were growing up," Johnson insisted. "Larry and Steve started helping me with auctions when they were just 12 years old. I mean they were their livestock here." selling, and they are still in the business with me." Son Ken is in the Air Force, and son Jeff passed away six years ago.

Always having a horse of his own and being interested in the horse business, Johnson and his partners conducted bi-monthly horse sales at Salina for 40 years. "We were one of the first bimonthly horse sales in the country," he recognized. His partners were Al Soukup, Bob Perry and Bernard Ire-

Also called upon to conduct purebred cattle auctions over a wide area, Johnson declared, "I did sell many purebred sales, actually mostly Herefords, and I did have one horse sale in Missouri. I never worked regularly at any other sale barns, after I started here. I had several opportunities, but I wanted to be loyal to customers. They'd

Sought to auction at youth livestock sales, Johnson served in that capacity gratis for several county fairs. "The hardest thing for those kids to understand was why their blue ribbon project would bring less than the white ribbon one, just because his dad had just bought a new tractor from the buyer," Johnson shared. "I'd tell them it may not be fair, but that's the way life is."

Not only has the size of farming operations expanded, but prices of commodities marketed by Johnson have multiplied, the auctioneer analyzed. "When I was a kid, calves would wean off weighing 400 pounds and sell for 25 cents. Farmers were making a good living, sending their kids to college and doing well.

"Now, calves often wean half again or more than that and sell for well over a dollar, and farmers can't make a sometimes insist that I sell living. It's the overhead: the price of machinery, fuel, fertilizer. Everything's gone sky-high," Johnson figured.

Likewise land values have increased at least tenfold. "I've sold pastures at auction for $100 an acre, and now they'll sell for $1,000 or more," compared Johnson, who has conducted a number of sales grossing over a million dollars during his career.

Although there may be a leveling of prices, Johnson pointed out, "They aren't making any more land, so it probably won't go down too far. What worries me the most is if these grain prices, now at a record level, would drop to where they were a few years ago, and the input costs stay up. It really does scare me, makes me shudder."

Johnson commented on problems in horse merchandising. "I've never seen the good horses sell any higher than they do now," he confirmed. "Yet, the colt and non-trained horse market is under extreme pressure, because slaughter plants are closed, and there isn't a base price. That, along with all of these wild mustangs we taxpayers are feeding. I don't know where it's all going to end up."

Present trends in livestock marketing are forecast by Johnson. "I used to keep a notebook filled with farmerfeeder cattle buyers throughout the Midwest, and I would call them whenever we were going to have certain lots of cattle," he remembered. "Now, there aren't very many farmers who feed cattle. We sell most of our cattle to order buyers.

"I've really seen lots of changes in the cattle and auction business. The best thing about it though is all of the wonderful farmers, ranchers, feeders and order buyers who I've had the opportunity to know and work for. I always tried to get the highest price for whatever I was selling. I never played any favorites," Johnson summarized.

Farmers & Ranchers Livestock is expected to continue prospering and growing, according to Johnson. "It's been a great 40 years, but it's time for me to slow down," he emphasized. "I'll keep busy with conducting auctions and rural real estate sales. I'm not quitting those."

"Roger certainly has been as dedicated employee as we could ever ask for here at Farmers & Ranchers. He has always been true blue to the company and a tremendous asset for us. We are definitely going to miss him," credited Mike Samples, sale pavilion manager for the past 20 years.

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Prepare cake batter and bake in 24 greased medium muffin cups as directed on package. Cool 10 minutes in pans. Remove to wire racks, cool completely. Pour milk into large bowl. Add dry pudding mix. Beat with wire whisk for 2 minutes or until well blended. Let stand 5 minutes to thicken. Meanwhile, using a serrated knife, cut cupcakes horizontally in half. Gently stir 1/2 cup of the whipped topping into pudding. Spoon about 1 tablespoon of the pudding mixture onto bottom half of each cupcake; cover with top of cupcake. Microwave remaining 1 cup whipped topping and the chocolate in small microwavable bowl on high for 1 1/2 minutes or until chocolate is almost melted, stirring after 1 minute. Stir until chocolate is completely melted and mixture is well blended. Frost each cupcake with about 1 1/2 teaspoons of the chocolate mixture. Refrigerate at least 15 minutes before serving. Store leftover cupcakes in refrigerator. Makes 2 dozen.

Hold The Mayo! Avocados Make A Better Spread

(NAPSA) — Before you spread another spoonful of mayo onto your sandwich ... think again. You can add all the buttery flavor and the richness you want by going for an avocado instead. They are packed with nutrients and are superspreadable. Grown in their ancestral home where rain and sunshine enhance the nutrient-rich volcanic soil. Hass avocados from Mexico are the creamiest.

Healthier For Your Family

The thentic flavor of avocados from Mexico. available year-round, adds zing to sandyour wiches and makes them healthier. Avocados have nearly 20 vitamins, minerals and phytonutrients, contain unsaturated fats — the good kind — and have no cholesterol. Mayonnaise has negligible nutrients and can have as much as 100 calories per tablespoon. You get half that — only 50 calories — in one-fifth of an avocado.

Pick the Perfect One

Perfect for spreading on your turkey club, scooping on top of your burger

layering onto your BLT. Mexican avocados are fresh, taking only days four from orchard to market. Avocados do not ripen until they are picked. As they get closer to the perfect ripeness, they become soft to the touch and the skin turns from green to almost black. To speed up the process, place them in a paper bag and leave them on your counter at room temperature.

Sandwiches are called "tortas" in Mexico; try this

AVOCADO & BEEF TORTA

1 ripe Mexican Hass avocado

1 tablespoon lime juice 1/2 teaspoon salt, divided Pinch ground red pepper 1/2 teaspoon ground cumin 1/2 teaspoon chili powder 1 pound flank steak 12- to 14-inch Italian loaf 1 cup torn salad greens 1 ripe large tomato, thinly sliced strike pit with a knife blade and pull to remove; scoop out pulp with a spoon; place in a small bowl. Mash avocado with a fork; stir in lime juice, 1/4 teaspoon of the salt and red pepper; set aside. In a cup, combine cumin, chili powder and remaining salt. Rub seasoning mix over both sides of steak; place on broiler rack. Broil 2 to 3 inches from heat, until cooked as desired (about 5 minutes on each side for medium). Remove to cutting board; let rest for 5 minutes; cut diagonally in thin slices. Cut bread horizontally almost through. Spread avocado on top half; layer greens, beef and tomato on bottom; close sandwich. Cut crosswise in 4 pieces. Serves 4.

Everyone Wants Flaky Pie Crust

If you are having trouble it's the larger pieces that achieving flaky pie crusts - try this. Chill the fat and the liquid before adding them to the flour. When combining the fat with the flour, you can crumble some of it finely, but make sure to leave some larger pieces as well. Fat that is rubbed into the flour until it has a sandy texture will promote tenderness, but separate the layers and slowly melt in the oven, that promote flakiness. For a piecrust that is both tender and flaky, use half chilled butter and half room temperature shortening. The shortening will add tenderness; the butter, flakiness. Just be sure to leave the butter in pieces at least as large as peas.

Mertz family has worked together for success

years. It also rents land that Mertz family members own individually.

"Things were wet in '93, but it was setting up to be a tremendous year. The corn was doing well. The beans were already waist-high," Bob said. "We were pretty closely monitoring what the Corps of Engineers had to say, though. We're only about 10-15 miles downstream from Tuttle Creek Lake's dam.

"In the end, Dad was the one who had the foresight perhaps because he'd been through the flood of '51. One day he just said that we'd better start cleaning up the facility now. We needed to move up, tie down or relocate anything we didn't want to float away.'

With neighbors' help, in three days the Mertzes were able to empty the grain bins; batten down the barns; and move the cattle, sheep and machinery to higher ground. For another two, they cleared out the first floor of their three homes, even pulling up the carpet. Then, even though the Corps of Engineers had announced it was opening the dam, Joe and Bob went out to try to rescue the irrigation motor, too.

The flooding was six inches deep when they reached bottomland. So, they might have succeeded if the water near the pivot pad hadn't obscured a gopher hole big enough to swallow a tractor tire.

By the time they'd dislodged their vehicle, the water had risen a lot with strangely little force and no noticeable flow. It was just under spark-plug level when they managed to save themselves.

By the next day, the Kansas (Kaw ) River was hillside to hillside over River Creek Farms.

Despite the difficult tasks the flood left behind, however - and even her early, rather drastic transition from urban Chicago nothing has shaken Mary's feelings about Kansas. Back when she thought of Bob as just a friendly shoulder to cry on, he'd scheduled a trip home for a Mertz family event. He invited her to come along to see her first farm, and the die was cast.

"It was a completely different world! I could not believe I was seeing all of that beauty, all that open land, the pastures, the livestock. His family and everything they have been doing together for four generations was so wonderful, too," she said. "I fell in love immediately.

"I think I may have started falling in love with Bob then, too. In fact, I've wondered if he had ulterior motives in inviting me to the farm. I'd known him as a businessman on Michigan Ave., but I learned who he really is in Kansas. Besides, we hadn't been back in Chicago very long before he asked me why we'd never dated each other.

And, later on, I realized I was in love with that man from Kansas.'

The Meat Board's general reaction when Bob and Mary announced their engagement was shock. Coworkers had missed signs of their growing friendship, so had no idea that they'd also begun dating.

Once married, the couple decided it was time to leave the skyscrapers of the city for the silos of rural life: They'd go home to Kansas, farm and rear kids.

Daughter Lisa is now a junior in German and international studies at Bob's

Son David graduated from Wamego High School last spring, after racking up honors in 4-H, school and future business leader activities. He's now a K-State freshman, studying engineering.

Todav Bob starts every day on the computer, crosschecking the weather and overnight grain markets. He's in charge of the dayto-day management of River Creek Farms' crops and sheep.

For almost 50 years, Harold and then Bob bought and finished 3.000 to 5,000 feeder lambs every vear. In 2002, however, Bob's long-term analyses of risks and returns led him to a difficult decision.

He cut back to a commercial herd of 200 Rambouillet ewes and to marketing purebred rams and lambs. With younger family members, he also manages 50 "reputable ewes" who produce Mertz Club Lambs, sold for 4-H and FFA projects. In the 2006-07, their lambs became champions in three counties.

Joe is in charge of River Creek Farms' hay and cattle production and its annual Simmental bull sale. He and Bob both strive to use research results and proven genetics to build a reputation for quality.

Bob's been yield mapping in-combine for nine years and grid soil sampling 155 acres of irrigated land four years. Added to his soil tests and contour yield maps from low-production areas, that's helping him target where to apply nutrient amounts which, like all chemicals, he tracks in and out. His careful records have also shown that applying half a crop's nitrogen pre-plant and half post-plant increases yields.

Bob has switched almost 1,000 acres to no-till, plus installed riparian buffers. K-State water-management software guides his centerpivot irrigation, and a consultant helps him monitor pests. He's tested cover crops, as well as participated in K-State research trials and a national corn-yield contest. His markets range from feedlots, the local co-op and futures contracts to a biodiesel plant he's invested

Mary has always appreciated Bob's quiet confidence in her abilities as she tried to learn about farm life, along with her children. Then as her children grew, Mary's community involvement did, too.

For four years she helped coordinate the high school's mentoring program for the class of 2007. She's now vice president of the Zeandale Community Board and president of the Wamego Portia Club, which encourages youth participation in civic and liberal arts events. She's a 20vear member of Kansas American Agriand Women, plus active on the Manhattan First Presbyterian Church Mission Committee. She directs two church youth choirs and has done the same for the Zeandale 4-H Club. She's become a trained elections clerk and volunteers at Riley County Farm Bureau's annual Kids' Ag Education Day.

Bob's now president of Riley County Farm Bureau and on the board for Wamego's Farmers Union Co-op, as well as Riley's Extension Council. He helped select K-State's new Extension sheep specialist, but may be best known locally for his belief in multi-generation stewardship. He was put in charge of both the Wamego Presbyterians' 125th anniversary and the Zeandale 4-H Club's 60th anniversary celebrations.

Harold Mertz and Bob's Aunt Betty Campbell were charter members of that 4-H club. Bob was a member and so were his children. For six years, he's also been the club's community leader, sheep project leader and senior Gavel Games (parliamentary procedure) coach — just more good training for the fu-

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

I Like Oil

I must confess I like oil and I like factory farming And I think factory health care is absolutely charm-

And factory education lets us school the huddled masses

While Conoco and offshore rigs produce our natural gases.

Factory transportation is a middle seat in coach

It's soccer moms in minivans, the thrifty man's approach.

If there ain't no fancy Learjet parked outside your bungalow

It still means you can pack your lunch and stand in line and go!

I love the pharmaceuticals that've given us new life

From cancer cures to botox shots, reduced our stress and strife

And doubled up our lifespan, though you hear them cursed a lot

By the very ones whose world they've changed, I guess they just forgot?

Forgot that all the coal they hate gave birth to industry That heats our homes and gives us cars and opportu-

And jobs, and time to stop and rest, take respite from the toil.

We built a country, good and great, with blood and sweat and oil.

There's some who sneer and denigrate what we call factory farming

Though we can feed the multitudes, they find it most alarming

"They're using everything," they say, "to make it And cheaper for the common folks. Do they think that they're omniscient?

more efficient.

Folks, there's nothing wrong with gardens or organic, we all know

The problem is most can't afford food that costs so much to grow.

If the world was a perfect place, the 'complaining' crowd's ideal

We'd have no impact on the earth, bananas with no peel.

Forests without clear cut tracts, factories without smoke,

No endless freeways, windmill farms, no global warming jokes.

But none of us, 'specially farmers, likes the crowding and pollution

But with the help of oil and gas, there came a revolution

Where people could find work to live, and improve their situation

And farmers who could feed themselves, were asked to feed the nation.

And we who till and mine and build your malls and schools unending

Leave footprints with each concrete pour that take millennia in mending

The search to give us all good lives, and all ... not just a few

Should also strive to make our tracks lass harmful when we do.

So here we sit on God's green earth, each one a worker bee

Contributing our own small part to have prosperity

And I for one am thankful what oil and factory farming gave

For if we'd stopped each time they whined, we'd still live in a cave!

Emergency fund can reduce stress

The Consumer Federation of America reports that two- thirds of unexpected expenses involve medical care or motor vehicles, said Carol Young, Kansas State University Research and Extension financial management specialist.

Last vear. Americans spent an average of $2,000 for such emergencies, she said.

With savings in an emergency fund, consumers can typically pay the unexpected bills without having to borrow or run up a credit card bill, either of which can add interest and stress, Young said.

If not in the habit of saving, setting money aside for an emergency fund may seem a monumental task. Saving as little as $10 a week, however. can be a good goal, said Young, who advised setting a reasonable goal -$250 to $500 — and then adding to it.

She recommends accumulating savings equivalent to one to two months' salary.

"After reaching the goal, keep saving to reduce debt and build financial security," Young

This farm was homesteaded by my grandparents. That means a lot to me. My kids grew up here but now live in the city. They visit often, but the tradition their great grandparents established is little more than holiday conversation.

My kids don't want this farm or the long-distance hassles of working with a renter, but I've made sure the wealth represented by this land passes to them. I worked with the KSU Foundation to reduce my tax obligation and transfer the farm's wealth.

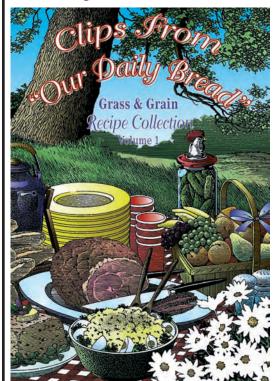

My kids may never get this dirt under their nails, but I have guaranteed that my grandparents' legacy and three generations of hard work will not end with me. Granddad would be proud.

The geography of home

I stood behind a handhewn log cabin moldering back into the raw elements of a minor side draw branching off Cottonwood Canyon. The skies to the south were Oklahoman, the skies above Coloradan. A stone wall, collapsed in places, showed a regularity at odds with such rough terrain. In a small clearing behind the cabin a corral was set back in the trees, and below, in an oak-shaded topography that I had once called home. It felt more like home than home did. Pinyon-juniper woodland, rocky bluffs secreting ancient petroglyphs, shattered stone flutes and box canyons and so far from my prairie home. Different birds. Different trees. Different grasses, shrubs, rocks. Different in every way, once so familiar and loved, now, after an absence of fifteen years or so, immediate and unchanged.

My companion, Chod, wandered off in search of the wren. Suddenly queasy with longing, I hunched over and closed my eyes. All that came to mind was a fragment of a Whitman poem, which I repeated over and over as if it alone had the power to save me. O my soul. O my soul.

I wondered if I could ever again be content in Kansas.

the side doors, there being two of them, and this being rural Kansas meaning nobody uses the front door when the side door is closer to the kitchen or the driveway or whatever other applicable reason that makes sense, I see the northernmost ridges of the Flint Hills rising a hundred feet above the Blue River Valley. To my left is a gray tangle of trees bordering Juganine Creek, an ephemeral stream normally dry or choked with fallen leaves. Only the spire of the church steeple and the white monolith of the grain elevator mark the town beyond those woods. To the west a plowed field slowly lifts to a bisecting dirt road and skies that stretch unbroken to the edge of the planet. This has been our home for eight years, and there's no place I'd rather live.

But it has not always been easy.

It was late October, 2006, when I wrote the introductory paragraphs. Two friends and I had embarked on a week-long tour through northern New Mexico and southern Colorado, ostensibly to follow a trail of Anasazi ruins centered around Chaco Canyon. That I ended up chasing ghosts from my past wasn't a surprise, given the terrain, but the emotional upheaval left me drained and, what's worse, compromised my love for our adopted state.

In the ensuing kerfuffle I came to realize that the notion of home or a homeground must, in some cases — my case — remain fluid. "Home is where the heart is" goes the adage but the heart is as uncontrollable as the weather. I wrestled with these feelings until I came to an uneasy truce, and so it went until a book arrived in the mail last week. Five minutes into "Home Ground, Language for an American Landscape," edited by Barry Lopez, and I was once more grounded in place.

Most of the contributors defined their home grounds in the singular, and specific, such as Patiann Rogers, who listed "a mile east of Wildcat Point, the site of Kit Carson's last campfire, Colorado." Others used broader vistas, as Antonya Nelson with her "Route 66," and Terry Tempest Williams and her "Colorado Plateau," and in so doing revealed a duality mirroring my own. It was a vindication I desperately needed. I was not alone.

As always when faced with such matters, I found myself outside, studying the hills, the woods, the fields. How would I list my homeground? Plural, as in the Southwest, the Rockies, and, yes, the tallgrass prairies of northeast Kansas. There is no one geography of home, no need for sacrifice or betrayal. Our hearts know this, even if sometimes we lose our way.

Be prepared is key to business success

The Boy Scout motto "Be Prepared" may be important to remember for people thinking about starting a business.

Glenn Muske, Oklahoma State University Cooperative Extension Service interim associate dean, assistant director, family and consumer sciences, said if you are thinking about starting a business keep in mind entrepreneurs succeed because of preparation and hard work

"There is a lot of time commitment involved with starting and owning your own business," Muske said. "An employee stands to lose a job, but business owners stand to lose their life savings. This is one of the key reasons why it is so important to plan well and be prepared for any situation before taking that big step."

Muske suggests defining personal goals, taking a course in business management, preparing a detailed business plan, completing a loan application and test marketing your idea before jumping off into the business world.

Think about what you want to accomplish professionally and personally.

"Looking at long-term reasons for starting a business are important," he said. "Take a look at your life and work based on a 10year span. During the first 5 years of operation, a business is considered a startup and a business begins to mature after the five-year

Muske said with proper preparation entrepreneurs will help protect investment both in time and money.

After going through the steps, entrepreneurs may find adjustments are needed, the idea is not valid or there is not a market after livestock is more essential than ever.

Low-Stress Handling Of Livestock Emphasized During EquiFest 'First Saddling' Demonstration

While he was working with a horse, Curt Pate emphasized that whatever livestock is being handled must be managed with the lowest stress methods pos-

Before going into the pavilion for his first presentation at the recent EquiFest of Kansas in Wichita, Pate said, "I have been conducting an increasing number of lowseminars around the coun-

"All of the recent news about cattle diseases and slaughter has brought livestock abuse to the attention of media and consumers. We must improve our management techniques," he demanded. The point was recognized periodically throughout his hour-long session while introducing a filly to her first saddling. Mike Mikos, Eskridge Quarter

Humane treatment of stress livestock handling. Horse breeder, brought his two-year-old palomino into the portable round pen set up in the pavilion for Pate to present the training demonstration.

"The reason I do these clinics is for the horses," acknowledged Pate of Helena, Mont. With a lifetime of livestock experience, Pate, making a repeat appearance at the EquiFest, is in demand throughout the United States and Europe for his advice. He was a technical advisor for the acclaimed Horse Whisperer movie.

Unlike some clinicians who start riding their colt during the first session, Pate conducted his colt starting seminar in three one-hour segments progressing from Friday's saddling through riding the filly on Sunday.

Broke to lead, the filly was worked extensively with the halter and lead. "I have changed my techniques from the way I used to start these colts and the way others often still do it," Pate evaluated. "I have my hands on her and I will continue to work to get her to relax, respect me and respond to my requests."

While the filly was continually pushing and rubbing, Pate did not reprimand her. "I've learned to let these things work themselves out. She'll decide that it's not necessary and no fun really," he insisted. The filly was never trotted or loped around the pen.

Although he would immediately jump on a colt when he was training as a teenager, Pate noted, "As my years have increased, I try to use my mind more instead of my body.'

The filly was perspiring and tense from the exposure to the crowd and new environment. "It will take her a while to get used to all of these strange things. Right now, she's worried that the boogev man might get her. She's not really paying attention to what I'm asking her to do," Pate recognized.

Although groundwork is required before saddling and riding a voung horse. there can be too much of that, Pate explained, contrasting opinions of some clinicians.

"A colt can become too relaxed and passive. Then when you are on their back and want them to move, they'll tend to resist or sulk up," he explained. "The horse must move, yet not buck, rear up, lie down or back up, such that they can hurt you or even themselves. It takes a balance of the whole deal.'

Gradually, the filly started respecting Pate, moving

Flying in from his ranch near Helena, Mont., Curt Pate is in demand around the world discussing low-stress livestock handling techniques. In his "First Saddling" session at the recent EquiFest of Kansas in Wichita, Pate continually emphasized low-stress in all work with the two-year-old palomino filly.

away from him on request and coming forward and leading on command. She was calm as the clinician rubbed her neck and back. 'Now, she's starting to bend, flex her neck and soften up not to be so tense," he credited.

Working on both sides and asking her to move all four feet in different directions when requested, Pate related, "She must learn to yield both ways.

"However, I'm not too big on bending horses. It takes their mind away. Any horse performing a speed maneuver is straight, not bent. I want to control her mind, not have to do it physically," he critiqued.

Appreciating her calmness, Pate credited, "This kind of horse is good for me. She has the manners most people want and

Pointing out that many who work with horses use whips and abusive methods, Pate ordered, "We do not need violence when we are working with horses or any kind of livestock. There might be a place for a prod sometimes, but it must be used in the proper manner."

Stepping over the fence, Pate described how working from the opposite side of the pen allows one to safely handle a horse with poor manners. "It might save you from getting kicked, pawed or run over," he advised. "I can get up on the fence and move my hands over her back, head and neck, exposing her to movements that are similar to when I'm riding.

Bringing out his lariat, Pate rubbed the filly all over and placed it around her heart area, simulating a girth as it was tightened. At first, the filly flinched and hopped with the pressure around her middle, but she was soon pacified and walked at ease upon command.

Opening the round pen gate, Pate lead the filly outside and started to pick up his pad and saddle when the palomino lunged to tighten the rope. "That was my fault, not hers," he quickly responded. "I was talking too much and not paying attention to my horse. We must be real careful where our mind is. The main focus should be on our horse.

Carrying the saddle and pad into the pen, Pate first rubbed the pad all over her back without alarm from the filly. Then he gently moved the saddle onto her back as she moved in a circle around him. No reprimand was made toward the filly, although she continued to move while he was adjusting the saddle and tightening the girth. Moving her around himself at a walk, Pate analyzed, "She probably doesn't even know she has the saddle on yet. She may still think it's the rope around her heart girth."

As he again expressed appreciation for the manners of the filly and her acceptance of his first steps of training, Pate complimented, "She's licking her lips in relaxation."

An experience involving rough handling of livestock had occurred just a few days earlier. "There was a truck accident near our place, and I was asked to assist with getting the cattle moved around," he recalled. "Those truckers and cattlemen there were just like the ones we have been seeing on television.

"We must control our urge for violence and fighting with livestock," Pate concluded.

Oliver and Rachel Beall of Emmett consigned a well-fit yearling horned Hereford bull to the 61st annual Northeast Kansas Hereford Association Sale at Manhattan.

'Farm Fair' slated April 7 in Holton as part of KAMS' 20th anniversary series

In celebration of its 20 years of working with rural Kansans, the Kansas Agricultural Mediation Services (KAMS) is hosting a series of Farm Fairs, featuring resources useful to producers and their fami-

The first Farm Fair is set for April 7 from 7 to 9 p.m. in Holton, Kan., at the 4-H Building on the Jackson County Fairgrounds. The event is free and open to the pub-

In keeping with KAMS' 20th anniversary, more than 20 federal, state and local organizations and agencies will have displays and representatives available to provide information and help answer questions.

As part of the fair, economist Rodney Jones, a farm management specialist with Kansas State University, will also give a 7:30 p.m. presentation on "Tools for Family Farm Transition."

Some of the agencies and organizations participating in the Farm Fair include: Kansas Weather Data Library and the Kansas Extension Disaster Education Network (KansasEDEN), Kansas Highway Patrol (transportation regulations), Department of Commerce (agri-tourism), Kansas PRIDE communities, Kansas Legal Service (legal assistance), Kansas Farm Bureau, K-State Farm Analyst Program (financial considerations), Kansas watershed specialists, Northeast Kansas Community Action Program (NEK-CAP), Agr-Ability (farming with disabilities), Kansas Farmers Union, Kansas Social and Rehabilitation Services, Northeast Kansas Area Agency on Aging; and the Holton Community Hospital (health checks).

"This is an opportunity for producers and their families to discover the resources available to them," said Char Henton, KAMS mediation coordinator.

Co-sponsoring the Farm Fair in Holton are the K-State Research and Extension offices in Atchison, Brown and Doniphan counties and in the Meadowlark Extension District (Jackson, Jefferson and Nemaha counties).

KAMS, administered by K-State Research and Extension, offers information, referral and dispute resolution services to Kansas farmers, ranchers, agricultural lenders, and U.S. Department of Agriculture agencies. More information about KAMS is available on the Web at http://www.oznet.ksu.edu/k ams/.

Information about KAMS and/or the other Fairs upcoming Farm around the state is available by calling 1-800-321-FARM or 785-532-6958.
