

Thirteen new agritourism businesses register with State of Kansas

Just weeks after attending an agritourism workshop series in Emporia, 13 new agritourism businesses registered with the State of Kansas this morning in Topeka.

The 13 applications were submitted to Secretary of State Ron Thornburgh by workshop instructor Jan Jantzen at a ceremony in the Secretary of State's Office.

The new entrepreneurs all attended a workshop series titled "Agritourism: Your Next Cash Crop?" hosted earlier this year by the Flint Hills Resource Conservation & Development Agency and the Kansas Small Business Development Center at Emporia State University. The workshops were designed for anyone interested in starting a new agritourism business or expanding an existing ag-based business to include elements of agritourism. Topics included financing, product pricing, business plan writing and legal issues.

Once the applications are processed, applicants will be eligible to open for business and receive a variety of financial and technical assistance from the Kansas Department of Commerce. Registered agritourism businesses also benefit by being listed as a registered agritourism operator at TravelKS.com, the official website of the state's travel and tourism industry.

There are currently 231 registered agritourism vendors in Kansas.

"It's extremely rewarding to work with these innovative farmers, ranchers and other rural business people," said Jantzen, Director of Rural Development for Flint Hills Resource Conservation & Development. "Their dreams are to share this beautiful and interesting rural environment, history and culture with visitors from urban areas of our country and around the world. By taking part in these workshops, the participants discovered how they can realize their dreams and also create a secondary or even primary source of income, thus enhancing the quality of life for themselves and the rural communities where they live. Given the success of these workshops, we will definitely be offering more of them."

Agritourism is typically defined as the crossroads of traditional agriculture and tourism. Farmers across Kansas are realizing the benefits of tailoring their operations to tourists, who are increasingly longing to visit a working ranch, rope a calf, ride a horse, pick their own apples or tour a winery. These activities provide lifelong memories for tourists and additional revenue for Kansas farmers who host them.

Representatives of the Kansas Department of Commerce and Travel and Tourism agencies gathered in Secretary of State Ron Thornburgh's office last week to celebrate the registration of the new Flint Hills agritourism ventures. Jan Jantzen, pictured third from the right, who coordinated the agritourism workshop sponsored in part by the Flint Hills RC&D office, delivered the applications.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Ground alfalfa movement: Southwest/South Central Tonnage: 13,799/4,518 Last week: 12,825/4,545 Last year: 14,510/5,607 Hay trade slow. Demand moderate to strong for grinding alfalfa, alfalfa pellets and dairy alfalfa, moderate for prairie hay, light for stock cow quality hay. Corn planting is spreading across the State with warmer temperatures in the forecast. Pasture burning in Eastern Kansas has been very active when the weather conditions allow. Alfalfa producers are keeping a close watch for cutworms and alfalfa weevil. Irrigators are watering alfalfa and wheat in Western Kansas. Where pastures are greening up, supplemental feeding is ending. If you have hay for sale or pasture to rent or need hay or grazing, use the services of the Hay and Pasture Exchange website: www.kfb.org/hayandpasture/default.htm

Southwest Kansas: Dairy and grinding alfalfa steady to firm. Movement dairy active, ground moderate. Alfalfa: Horse, small square, 150.00-200.00, mostly 180.00-200.00; Dairy, Supreme 160.00-175.00; Premium 150.00-170.00; Good, 120.00-150.00; a little new crop Dairy contracted 95.00-100.00 standing in the field. Missouri Exchange celebrates first year of growth, change

What a busy first year it's been.

The University of Missouri Center for Agroforestry and Grow Native!s Missouri Exchange website is marking its first year with rapid growth. Since this time last year, the site has grown to 350 members, received up to 22,000 hits per month and added new product categories and features, including a "Tip of the Week."

Missouri Exchange is an online marketplace where Missouri agricultural and value-added producers can market their products - for free. The website, available at www.missouriexchange.com, specializes in niche agricultural products, such as native plants, herbs, decorative and specialty wood products, meat, eggs, cheese and other products for which markets may not already be in place locally. The site showcases Missouri's diverse agricultural products, links sellers to the market, helps locate sources for hard-to-find products and educates consumers and producers. The site also creates opportunities for buying locally, which benefits the environment and the economy.

Potential buyers can reduce search time to find products that meet their standards and specifications. Sellers also reduce marketing costs by increasing the exposure of their business, advertising their products and increasing markets at no additional cost to them.

"We have listened to website users throughout this first year, adding more product categories and sub-categories to better fit the goods producers are looking to sell or consumers would like to buy," said website administrator Ina Cernusca, research associate and marketing specialist with the Center for Agroforestry. "Through the new 'Tip of the Week' and 'Did you Know?' sections, users are encouraged to get more involved in the website by sending tips and interesting information about the products they sell. The site is becoming more and more interactive and user friendly, and we are excited about the direction in which it is going."

A September 2007 survey showed 27 percent of registered users visit the site several times a month or more, with 31 percent spending more than 10 minutes at the site. Members were generally satisfied with the website and 92 percent would recommend it to a friend.

Missouri Exchange also works to educate both producers and sellers about products, some of which might not be familiar to the general public. Uses for the products, typical market value and quality standards are included for the products featured.

Also in the past year, The MU Center for Agroforestry and Grow Native! have sponsored a workshop to explain and promote using the website; more such workshops are planned. Grow Native! is a joint program of the Missouri Department of Conservation and Missouri Department of Agriculture.

"Our first year has been a great learning and growth experience and we look forward to many more years of helping Missouri agricultural producers find markets for their products," Cernusca said.

For more information about the site, contact Ina Cernusca at (573) 882-4848 or email cernuscam@missouri.edu.

Paragon Perspectives

A commodity analysis by Ryan Broxterman

Soybeans

On March 31, the USDA released its annually planting intentions report. The report said what many expected it to; we will add acreage to soybeans and take them away from corn in the upcoming year. The USDA estimated soybean planted acres at 74.8 million. This number was viewed as considerably bearish as the average trade guess was right around 71.5 million acres. This report lead to a sharp selloff and now what has turned into a rally back above pre-report prices. During that selloff total soybean open interest dropped from 617,000 to 503,900. Since the report, index funds have stepped in and began to buy the beans again. This buying could trigger additional hedge fund buying. Traders will be waiting to see if prices continue to firm and if open interest continues to grow.

Much of the fund buying is centered on the idea that the recent drop in soybean/corn price ratio could shift 2-3 million acres of soybeans to corn. There are also concerns that prices are not yet high enough to increase 2008/09 Brazil and Argentina production 18 million metric tonnes as currently estimated. Next week, USDA will revise their estimate of US 2007/08 soybean carryout. Most feel they will increase the carryout by 20 million bushels from 140-160.

Thoughts: Soybeans look as if they may have found a bottom for now. November soybeans have rallied nearly $2 from last Tuesdays low to Fridays high. For producers who are still holding old crop or have not yet moved any new crop beans, we are advising to get started with sales if the market reaches $12.50 basis November. With the extreme volatility currently in the soybean market, it wouldn't be surprising to see soybeans fall into range bound trade from $13.50 to $10.50 in the upcoming weeks.

Corn

The USDA surprised the trade in the opposite direction in corn with their March planting intention estimate at 86 million acres. This was down over 5.5 million acres from last year and was a little over a million acres lower than the average pre-report estimate. The report pushed corn above the $6 level, where it looks to remain for awhile. This week we made new highs on concerns that US 2008 plantings may be delayed due to wet conditions and the forecast of more rain next week. While the rain isn't currently causing much in the ways of problems, concerns about the extended wetness is beginning to weigh on farmers and traders alike.

Thoughts: Corn looks to remain very strong in the months ahead. The USDA report only added to the already bullish fundamentals the corn currently faces. Under current estimates, 2008-09 looks to be the tightest season in history. Unless we see a shift from beans back to corn we expect corn to push toward the $6.50 area and possibly beyond. For producers looking to get a floor in place for new crop, we are suggesting buying puts as the potential for upside from here is still considerable. Livestock producers who have not protected corn needs through the rest of the year should strongly consider doing so.

Wheat

Rains across US Soft Red Winter country and dryness across much of Western Kansas provided support last week. Informa this week estimated US 2008 winter wheat production near 1704 million bushels, up from 1516 last year. They also rated the crop 81 percent normal versus 96 last year and the 10 year average of 87 percent. Kansas was rated 75 percent normal, which is down considerably from last year's rating of 100 percent. Texas is rated at 62 percent normal vs. 92 percent last year.

Thoughts: We feel that on a rally back to $10.50 producers who are not currently heavily sold should look to add to new crop wheat sales, as well as getting started on 2009. Wheat looks as if it could fall off considerably in the months ahead, given the expected large 2008-09 crop. A wide spread rain across the western hard red wheat belt would likely cause a considerable setback in new crop prices.

Cattle

Cash fundamentals are still weak but a sharply higher pork market and hog futures helped push live cattle higher last week. The rally in live cattle futures, especially the deferreds, was also helped by a higher corn futures trade; as a higher cost of gain generally is associated with lower beef production. Showlists are beginning to get larger as the cattle numbers we have talked about for months are beginning to surface at heavier weights than expected. These larger numbers will remain for the next couple of months before things begin to look better going into the fall.

Thoughts: The weak cash fundamentals, as well as record large pork and poultry production with a slumping economy, make it difficult to get too optimistic in the short term. We see feeder cattle continuing to stay on the defensive as negative feeding margins and the risk for higher corn continues to exist. We do feel things will improve this fall; however, we question whether cash can push higher than the current futures premium held in the deferred contracts.

Kansas corps tests concept in Melvern

On April 19 the city of Melvern will be transformed. Vibrantly painted in black and gold, "power cat" purple, crimson and blue and the entire spectrum of colors in between, college students will proudly display their school colors. However, school pride will not be the primary objective of this day. Instead, these volunteers will unite in Melvern to build area hiking and biking trails.

Transcending rivalry and geographic boundaries approximately 80 college students from K-State, KU, WSU, FHSU, Butler Community College, Allen County Community College, Flint Hills Technical School and others will align as Kansans to support "Friends of the Trail" as part of a new statewide initiative, the Kansas Corps.

This initiative will link all types of higher education community service programs together to serve the public good, enhancing the quality of life in Kansas communities.

The opportunity for Kansas college students to work together with "Friends of the Trail" will test the concept of the Kansas Corps.

"The opportunities created for the state of Kansas by an initiative such as Kansas Corps are exponential," said

Christine Downey-Schmidt, former State senator and current Chair of the Kansas Board of Regents. "College student volunteers are a great untapped resource and this program will create a windfall of benefits for all involved, including all Kansas communities."

Kansas Corps will network college and university programs across the state, promoting service and volunteerism. The vision of Kansas Corps is to improve lives, strengthen neighborhoods and foster civic responsibility. Program benefits will be enjoyed by volunteers as well as those served.

With a single phone call, this group of college student volunteers from multiple campuses will be mobilized to provide disaster recovery, social services and/or community development assistance to any region of the state.

"In the course of this landmark day, Kansas Corps will embark on an unprecedented journey with the community of Melvern: we will foster rural economic gain, while building a community that is sustaining their own future. This project is the perfect union of community and college volunteers- each expanding through a sense of community, responsibility and volunteerism," explained Dr. Curt Brungardt, director of FHSU's Center for Civic Leadership and one of the program developers.

Hallmark to this effort is the alignment of many groups: "Friends of the Trail", Westar Electric Green Team, Kansas Trails Council and PRIDE organization. Kansas Corps will complement these efforts linking Kansas' College and University volunteer programs.

Many Kansas higher learning institutions have public service/volunteerism programs designed to match college students with local communities. Kansas Corp does not focus on creating a new public service and volunteer program, but rather links and builds upon established programs.

To obtain more information or to get involved with this project, Kansas colleges and universities, non-profit organizations and state and governmental agencies can visit www.kansascorps.org or contact Dr. Curt Brungardt, Executive Director, Center for Civic Leadership, FHSU, cbrungar@fhsu.edu, (785) 628-5592.

Moist roots the key to bareroot plantings

Many homeowners first learn about bareroot plants when they buy a rose that's packaged in a plastic bag.

But, windbreak trees, fruit trees and many smaller fruit plants are available bareroot, too. Often, they cost less than the same plants, sold in containers, said horticulturist Ward Upham Bareroots come with a do-or-die rule, however: Those roots must never dry out before planting.

"That's a big reason why experts advise getting bareroots planted in early spring, as soon as you get them," said Upham, Kansas State University Research and Extension's Master Gardener coordinator.

He advises opening and checking mail-order or packaged plants immediately. If their roots aren't moist, they'll need a six- to 12- hour soaking in water before planting. If the roots are moist, planting can wait a day or two so long as the plants are repacked and placed in a cool, sheltered place.

"That's about as long as bareroots should stay out of the soil, though. So, if your yard is too wet for planting then, you'll need to heel the plant roots in, in a well-drained, sheltered location," Upham said.

He recommends letting bareroots wait in a bucket of water while digging their planting holes.

"Each one will need a hole that's wide enough to accommodate all of its roots without twirling them. If a plant has one really long root, you'll be better off if you cut it to fit, rather than circle it around the hole. Twirled roots are what eventually can girdle and even kill a tree," Upham said.

Improving the fill dirt also can promote girdling, he said. Plus, amended soil can allow water to run through quickly and then fill the planting hole like a root-suffocating fish bowl.

"You don't need first-year fertilizer for bareroot plants, either," the horticulturist said.

In general, bark color helps gardeners to identify and duplicate original planting depth, he said.

"One exception is that the graft union on apples must end up 3 to 4 inches above the soil surface after the tree is fully in place," Upham said. "The graft line for peaches must be below the soil surface."

Preacher finds inspiration, good deeds in beekeeping

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — Allen Blanks works a knife into an old honeycomb to scrape off excess wax. It's mundane work, but it must get done.

Soon, Blanks will drive his truck from the Lynchburg area to Georgia to pick up three pounds of bees to repopulate his hives. (At 2,000 bees to a pound, that's roughly 6,000 honeybees.) Later this spring, Blanks will let them loose on farms throughout Virginia to pollinate fruit and vegetable plants.

Blanks has been a beekeeper since 1948 and a preacher for almost as long. The 84-year-old intends on keeping bees for as long as he can.

"I don't know how much longer I have to live," he says. "But I really do get enjoyment out of it. I feel like it's something that is useful to mankind."

Blanks sits in the shadow of his carport, which is stacked high with crates and boxes. He wears a white jumpsuit over a collared shirt. The skin on his hands is rough and cracked.

Blanks cleans the combs methodically, with a smooth dip of his knife. Each bee leaves a cocoon-like shell in its cell after birth. These shells add up over time, thickening the combs. But it takes years before the combs are uninhabitable.

"Bees reuse their combs until they get so dark and heavy that they can't be used anymore," he says.

At the height of his beekeeping career, Blanks had 500 hives. But in the 1980s, his bee populations started to dwindle. Tiny pests, varroa mites and tracheal mites, were killing off his bees.

Under normal circumstances, bee populations fluctuate throughout the year. They die off in the winter months and repopulate in the spring, reaching upwards of 60,000 bees to a hive by summer.

The constant battle with mites forced Blanks to downsize over the years. Even today, he must take preventive measures against the mites.

Last year's mysterious loss of honeybee colonies, which afflicted hives throughout the country, did not affect Blanks. The cause is still unknown.

Blanks pauses from his work to check the status of one of his hives. Hands steady, he slowly pulls out a comb encased in a wooden frame. Some of the worker bees have gobs of pollen on their legs. The tiny white eggs are visible in some of the cells. The queen bee has been busy. So far, so good.

Born in Halifax County, Blanks lives in a house off Candler's Mountain Road. Blanks bought a farm in Halifax County after he got back from serving in World War II.

"At one time, I had right many cattle," he says.

He pauses. "Grew some tobacco. Share-croppers did most of the tobacco work."

Blanks still owns the farm, but he rents out most of the land to a farmer, who raises cattle and grows timber.

To supplement his farm and beekeeping, Blanks sells honey from his home. He puts up a plywood sign in the yard when he's stocked up. Blanks has been a Baptist preacher for almost as long as he's been keeping bees. He stopped preaching in August, but he still performs weddings, funerals and other services.

He sees his faith through his life's work.

"When you look at creation, especially working with bees, you have to realize that there's something there that causes all these things, a higher power," he says.

Bees remind him of the delicate balance of nature and the intricate relationships between different organisms.

People remind him of bees, too.

"We're sort of like bees in a way," he says. "We group together in big cities, in big groups of people, and we interact with one another."

Blanks hopes to pass on the bee business to one of his six children. But for now, spring pollination is what's on his mind.

EQUAL HOUSING OPPORTUNITY

Horsin' Around

By Don Coldsmith

Rosa Guerrero

I was prepared to be unimpressed. Another interpretive dancer ... we were at one of the luncheon meetings during the annual convention of Western Writers of America, in El Paso. But by the time Rosa Guerrero had finished her program, I realized that here was a very special person. Smart, pretty, gifted, a marvelous interpreter not only of dance but of life. She lectured as she danced, demonstrating the richness of America's heritage.

I was impressed, too, by a print flier which had been placed on each table, explaining her program and its philosophy. I spoke to her afterward, and received permission to use it. I don't usually use the writing of others, but this is special. Here are selected thoughts from Rosa Guerrero's "Our Multicultural Tapestry."

Our country is a multicultural tapestry, a mosaic of many people. Each group that represents our land is unique and different. Because of our differences, we can all contribute something important to the fabric of the American Life. Therefore, each person is special and unequalled.

When God created the earth, He also created a diversified spectrum of birds, flowers, rainbows, and human beings. Thank God for all the differentness. How dull it would be if all of us were the same.

Our traditional folkways are beautiful yet different. We must try to respect the differentness of others. In our culture, with our languages, customs, and values, we can demonstrate to the world our diversified folkways.

But what is an American? Is he not a combination of many beautiful cultural groups that make up a tapestry? As a former educator for the El Paso public schools for 20 years, I have told my students how beautiful they are. Whether they are black, brown, or white, they are special. In the classroom or during my cultural dance presentations, I have tried to show my students that we are all part of a great cultural flow. We are all Americans who, because of our cultural heritage, contribute something unique to the fabric of American life. We are threads that are woven into a multicultural tapestry, the fabric of American life. We are like the notes in a chord of music ... if all the notes were the same there would be no harmony ... no real beauty ... because harmony is based on differences, not similarities. This is as true in human relations as it is in music. So I try to teach my students how we can be proud of our differences ... how to respect the differentness of others. This ... to me ... is what my country is all about.

You are special, you are so very special. You are different, so great and unique. Look around you ... no one in the world is like you. That is why you are so outstanding and so very unique.

Be proud of yourselves, of your culture and heritage. Develop a strong, healthy identity. Never be ashamed of who you are, but strive every day to be a better person. Each day could be your last one, there might not be a tomorrow. All of us have time ... how you use it is up to you. Use it wisely, for we are all on borrowed time.

Be positive every day.

If you think you are beaten, you are.

If you think you dare not, you don't.

If you like to win, but you can't, it is almost certain you won't.

If you think you'll lose, you're lost.

For out in the world we find, success begins with a person's mind.

If you think you are outclassed, you are.

You've got to be sure of yourself before you can ever win a prize.

Life's battles don't always go to the stronger or faster human, but sooner or later the person who wins, is the person WHO THINKS HE CAN!

Thank you, Rosa.

See you down the road.

FSA announces adjustments to CRP burning requirements

Bill R. Fuller, State Executive Director of the Kansas Farm Service Agency has announced adjustments to the burning specifications for land enrolled in the Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) practice CP25—Rare and Declining Habitat.

“The CP25 maintenance burn requirement was developed in the 1990’s with recommendation by the Kansas Technical Committee and approval by the Kansas FSA State Committee. It was recognized that burning benefits the development of native grasslands and improves the habitat for wildlife,” Fuller said.

CRP participants enrolled in this voluntary practice agreed to these maintenance burn requirements in their contract. Planning, education, training and safety by CRP participants must be a priority when burning is conducted on CRP acreage. Burning workshops, training programs, and fostering burning associations will be available with the cooperation and expertise of the Extension Service, Rural Fire Departments, Kansas Forest Service, and Natural Resource Conservation Service.

“Because the local FSA County Committee is better informed of local conditions to provide consistent and equitable administration of burning requirements, they will have full authority to grant individual burning exemptions to CRP participants,” said Fuller.

Occasional exemptions during the final year of the CRP contract may be granted by the local county committee when a particular burn would create a significant safety hazard that meets the following conditions:

Conditions due to significant drought, high winds, excessive temperatures and/or low humidity that have prevented completing the prescribed burn.

Close proximity to homes, businesses, housing developments, interstate highways, farmsteads, windbreaks, fuel facilities, etc., especially those constructed after the beginning of the CRP contract.

Create conditions susceptible to wind erosion following the burn in consultation with NRCS.

Any time the burn would violate State law or County ordinance during the contract period.

In addition, if an exemption is granted for any of the above reasons, then a light disking or a maintenance mowing/shredding shall be used as a substitute required maintenance practice without cost-share assistance. Swathing, haying or grazing is prohibited by National Policy.

“This exemption policy will not be a blanket lifting of the maintenance burn requirement,” emphasized Fuller. “Local county committees will have the authority to exempt certain acreages with safety hazards.”

Hays beef roundup coming

Kansas State University’s Agricultural Research Center at Hays has scheduled its Beef Roundup for April 17.

The annual event will begin with registration at 11:30 a.m. and lunch at noon in the center’s Hays Arena. There is no charge to attend the event and lunch is complimentary.

The Roundup, which is open to beef producers and anyone in the community and beyond, will provide an overview of research projects ongoing at the center.

More information about the Roundup is available by calling (785) 625-3425.

- Quality in Volume.
- Generations of problem-solving genetics. Low to moderate birth weight bulls by high accuracy sires and out of dams backed by several generations of low BW, excellent growth and positive carcass traits.
- Bred and managed for dependable performance with sensible EPDs. Fed to be fit — not fat.
- Your Private Treaty Headquarters. All cattle sold private treaty — no pressure, no politics. Come visit us and together, we'll invest the time necessary to identify the right bull(s) that best fit your program and help you gain a competitive edge. No pressure, no rush decisions.
- "Each bull fertility tested and guaranteed."
- All bulls scanned by ultrasound and tested negative for PI-BVD, as in the past.
- Your Partner in Progress - We want the opportunity to earn your business.

Not nearly all family could attend, but Col. Roger Johnson's wife, Lynne, and son, Steve, and his wife, Kendra were seated just inside the door at Farmers & Ranchers Livestock Commission Company, Inc., at Salina last Thursday for the reception recognizing Johnson's retirement from 40 years of service as auctioneer, fieldman and radio voice for the sale pavilion. Steve and his brother, Larry, assist their father in conducting farm, household, collectibles and real estate auctions over a wide area, a business which the family will continue, with many sales already scheduled in the next several months.

Junior beef leaders focus on their future at YBIC

Young cattle producers accepted the challenge to be "Focused on My Future" during the 2008 Youth Beef Industry Congress (YBIC), March 27-30 at the Purina Research and Conference Center at Gray Summit, Mo. The biennial event allowed 152 young men and women who are the leaders of junior breed and state junior cattlemen associations to interact with one another while exploring their futures through career building exploration.

Designed for top individuals in the beef industry, the 2008 YBIC was sponsored by Purina Mills, the U.S. Beef Breeds Council and National Cattlemen's Beef Association (NCBA).

"We wanted to make this year's YBIC the most interactive in years with a look into real-world career opportunities," said Chris Stephens, American Hereford Association director of youth activities and the 2008 YBIC planning chairman. "The speakers and tours allowed the participants to learn about themselves and the career opportunities in the beef industry while networking with others."

Young professionals who have extensive experience in the beef industry addressed the attendees in several interactive panels that covered building a career, livestock marketing and human resources. A "Been There, Done That" panel included Angie Denton, Blue Rapids, Kan.; Jarrod Gillig, Hereford, Texas; Kyle McMillan, Ohio, Ill.; and Chad Zehnder, Stanchfield, Minn., all of whom served on junior beef breed boards in the past. The panel discussed their diversified careers and how their involvement in junior breed organizations helped prepare them for their careers and what they look for in hiring individuals. They stressed the importance of setting goals, internetworking, networking at events such as YBIC, diversifying their experiences, as well as sharing a passion and dedication to the industry. "People are the most important part to animal agriculture," said McMillan who earlier served on the Polled Hereford Council, as he outlined six key steps to success. "Dedication and a sincere desire are critical to success today and tomorrow," he said.

A marketing panel discussed the importance of marketing livestock in a catchy way through a variety of mediums. Jared Spader, Osborn & Barr and lifelong Angus breeder defined marketing as "the intersection of psychology and commerce." Other panel members included Christy Couch Lee, National Swine Registry; Anita Vanderwert, Brownfield/Learfield Networks; John Zeloski and Brant Gilbert, both with Purina.

A final panel discussion included tips on organizing a cover letter and resume as well as preparing for a job interview. Panelists included human resources experts Jamie Meyer Rutledge, who works for Rubbermaid, and Karen Howard, Land O' Lakes Purina. Both encouraged the group to have outside and volunteer activities as well as experience. They said that knowing the company and asking questions in the interview process is important.

Diane Johnson, Fort Worth, Texas, also offered tips for preparing for a career. She obtained each participant's resumes in advance and critiqued them and offered advice and showed examples of exceptional work. She demonstrated hand shaking and interview skills to the group as well. Johnson, the executive director of the Livestock Publications Council, offered three words of advice, "Consideration. Honesty. Respect."

In addition to participating with the interactive panels and discussions, the youth had the opportunity to learn more about themselves and others through ice breakers and team building activities. Kim Anderson, University of Georgia Fanning Institute, challenged the group to think about the importance of moving from a "competition" mind-set to a "completion" mindset that works for the best of an organization and the beef industry. She demonstrated that by adding the letter "I" to "compete," an organization can grow to enhance the experiences for all those involved.

Other speakers that addressed the group include Mark Wellman, NCBA field representative; Rod Nulik, Land O'Lakes Purina Feed LLC Cattle Business Group marketing manager, and Craig Huffhines, American Hereford Association executive vice president. Wellman gave a forecast on beef cattle numbers in the U.S. that included purebred cow numbers as well as fed cattle. He said the typical 10-year cattle cycle is a thing of the past. Nulik encouraged the youth to give back to others stating that volunteering and affording others opportunities is very important in today's society. Finally, Huffhines challenged the group to face their fears in life by finding a mentor.

In addition to interacting with speakers, attendees toured segments of Purina's Research Farm, attended a hockey game and networked with others. YBIC strives to bring youth together working in the interest of the beef cattle industry and to provide them with further knowledge and understanding of all segments of the beef industry.

Gary and Eileen Patrick, right, have a cattle operation near Lindsborg and have sold cattle through the Farmers & Ranchers sale pavilion at Salina for many years. They expressed appreciation to Col. Roger Johnson and congratulated him during a retirement reception recognizing his 40 years of service at the barn.

Scientists explore techniques to limit antibiotics in animal waste

A recent Associated Press report revealing the presence of drugs in many municipal water supplies has raised questions about the risks to humans of long-term exposure to small amounts of pharmaceutical compounds. While it is believed that most of the drugs originate from human medications, University of Missouri researchers are investigating the impact of livestock pharmaceuticals and developing best practices to protect the environment.

MU scientists are looking at simple, low-cost techniques that farms and animal-feed operations might use to trap and neutralize antibiotics in animal waste. "We want to be able to help farmers in the state do what they need to feed the population and continue to be good stewards of the environment," said Keith Goyne, a soil scientist with MU's School of Natural Resources.

Many livestock producers use antibiotics to treat sick animals. Healthy livestock may also receive antibiotics in their feed in order to promote growth. Thirty to 80 percent of any given dose of antibiotic may end up excreted as waste rather than absorbed by the animal. When manure is used to fertilize croplands, antibiotics in the manure may get into the soil and eventually end up in streams, lakes or rivers.

"The amounts are relatively low," said Goyne. But no one knows much about the long-term effect these compounds might have on humans, animals and the environment. "I think we should be concerned but not alarmed."

According to Goyne, a tiny dose in our tap water is not the only potential problem. Antibiotics, which are designed to kill disease-causing bacteria, could wreak havoc on microbial communities in the soil. One consequence might be the emergence of antibiotic-resistant bacteria that could infect humans, livestock and wildlife.

Antibiotics also might disrupt essential biological activity in the soil. "Microorganisms are essential to life on earth," said Goyne. "They conduct processes such as nutrient cycling, organic matter decomposition and a variety of other functions. Without them behaving as they should, agriculture would change substantially."

Goyne is collaborating with MU assistant professor of forestry Chung-Ho Lin, professor of soil science Steven Anderson and two USDA soil scientists based at MU, Robert Lerch and Robert Kremer. They are investigating the use of vegetative buffers to control the spread of antibiotics in surface runoff from fields treated with manure.

Studies by MU soil scientists have already shown that grass buffers in croplands can help contain nutrients and herbicides by reducing runoff and degrading the chemical compounds.

"We're fairly confident that these buffers will work well for antibiotics, but it's yet to be tested," said Goyne.

Vegetative buffers serve as a filter for surface runoff. Placing buffers between rows of crops allows the buffers to intercept runoff as it flows downhill. Using the right plants in buffers is important. All plants change the physical, chemical and biological properties of the soil in which they grow.

Using specific plant species can make the soil a more effective filter by increasing its ability to physically trap sediment and by promoting a diverse community of microorganisms that can decompose certain chemical compounds.

"We're looking at buffers that have just grass species as well as tree-grass buffers, which we call agroforestry buffers," he said.

In field tests at the MU Bradford Research and Extension Center, the researchers are dousing small plots with a rainfall simulator to test the effectiveness of different buffer designs in reducing concentrations of antibiotics in surface runoff. In the laboratory they are applying antibiotics to soil samples and analyzing the results: Using high-performance liquid chromatography, the scientists can measure parts-per-billion levels of antibiotics in solution. A technique called infrared spectroscopy allows researchers to detect the infrared wavelengths absorbed by the soil samples. This combination of wavelengths serves as a "fingerprint" for identifying changes in the organic-matter composition of the soil induced by different plant species in the buffer.

"Noting such changes will improve understanding of how the buffers influence retention of the antibiotics in soil," Goyne said.

Preliminary results have shown promise. "We're seeing that soil that has been extracted from the root zone of a poplar tree is enhancing the degradation of at least one of the antibiotic drugs we're looking at," said Goyne. "That shows us that the microorganisms in the soil where the poplar tree is growing are helping to break this compound down, which will prevent it from remaining in the environment for long periods of time or moving on to surface water resources."

K-State to sponsor canola field tour April 16

Kansas farmers will have the chance to gather first-hand information on growing canola in Kansas from a fellow producer, canola researchers and other speakers during the Canola Field Tour scheduled for April 16 in Rice and Reno counties.

The tour gives producers and others an opportunity to learn more about a crop that could become increasingly important in Kansas crop rotations.

K-State and Oklahoma State University have been collaborating on research aimed at increasing the profitability of canola production in the southern Great Plains.

The tour will begin at the Clark Woodworth Farm, Sterling at 9 a.m. Canola producer Clark Woodworth will share his experiences with growing canola and how it has helped his crop rotation. K-State Research and Extension agronomist Vic Martin will share results from tillage and fertility research and will discuss a multi-site research project funded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Risk Management Agency. K-State agronomist Kraig Roozeboom will discuss preliminary results from a canola establishment study.

The second stop of the event will be at the Partridge Research Farm, Partridge. K-State agronomist Dave Mengel will give a presentation on soil fertility issues in canola production and Martin will give an overview of tillage systems research.

At 11:30 a.m. the group will be at the K-State South Central Experiment Field in Hutchinson. Canola researcher Mike Stamm will discuss the results of variety trials and development and potential releases.

Canola, raised primarily for its use as cooking oil, is a broadleaf crop that can be grown in rotation with wheat in Kansas and Oklahoma. The water-efficient crop can reduce grassy weeds, diseases and insects in subsequent wheat fields and can be a forage crop for livestock. When the oilseed is crushed, it results in one of the most healthy vegetable oils available, plus a high-protein meal that dairies, in particular, like to feed.

More information, registration and directions to the sites are available by contacting Troy-Lynn Eckart at (785) 532-5776 or sprite@ksu.edu.

EPA grants exemption allowing Lumax on sorghum

After a multi-year effort to add Lumax to the grain sorghum grower's toolbox, the Environmental Protection Agency has labeled the pre-plant herbicide to be used on grain sorghum in Kansas and Nebraska. The Kansas Grain Sorghum Producers Association thanked those who worked for approval of the label including the Kansas Department of Agriculture, Kansas State University and the National Sorghum Producers.

Lumax includes the active ingredient mesotrione and can be used as a pre-plant herbicide. EPA granted emergency exemptions allowing the use of Lumax on grain sorghum in Kansas in 2006 and 2007.

"Having Lumax labeled for use on sorghum in Kansas and Nebraska reduces the uncertainty you have when you are waiting for an exemption," according to KGSPA Executive Director Jere White. "Now that Lumax is labeled for grain sorghum in our state, our growers will be able to plan better when making their weed control decisions."

Because grain sorghum

is considered a minor crop, producers have a limited number of crop protection options.

"We've been working on getting a label for Lumax on sorghum ever since it was approved for corn. When EPA approved the label for Lumax, that was very good news for our sorghum producers who need pre-plant broadleaf weed control for their crop especially in cases where they are experiencing herbicide resistance issues," White said. "As with all crop protection tools, we strongly encourage our growers to read and follow label instructions."

The label information for Lumax is available at the KGSPA website at www.ksgspa.com/sorghum.

New Extension program aims to tame stress

Stress at work can prompt job dissatisfaction, absenteeism, lower productivity, turnover and increased health care costs, a Kansas State University Research and Extension specialist said.

"Stress at work need not mean stress at home, though," said Deb Sellers, Kansas State University Research and Extension specialist on adult development and aging.

While some stress may be inevitable, taking such stresses home can be harmful to mental and physical health and damaging to personal relationships and quality of life, said Sellers, who is working to bring a University of Illinois Research and Extension Program — "Intentional Harmony: Managing Work and Life" — to Kansas.

The educational stress management series is research-based, with plenty of practical how-tos for managing necessary stresses and taming — or eliminating — unnecessary stresses, she said. Sessions in the series focus on:

Work & the Individual offers dual lessons on physical and emotional health and balancing life at home with work.

Work & Partner emphasizes building and managing relationships and resolving conflicts (via emotional repair) and sharing household work.

Work & Parenting offers insight on how parents' work can impact their children and the mood at home and tips for monitoring children's activities while working and carving out quality time for family life.

Work Stress emphasizes building positive relationships at work and developing effective policies and services to resolve conflicts and reduce stress in the work environment.

Work & Extended Family and Friends emphasizes social support, relationships and time management to make time for work, family, friends and yourself.

The program was developed by Angela Wiley, an assistant professor of applied family studies and Extension specialist in family life. Wiley worked with a team of Illinois family life educators, nutrition specialist and support staff that included contributing authors, graphic designers, and artists.

Sellers and K-State Research and Extension northeast area family and consumer sciences specialist, Sharolyn Flaming Jackson, are now in the process of training Kansas' Extension staff to deliver the program in the state.

Sessions will be offered through Extension offices and work sites, such as Lunch-and-Learn offerings or in cooperation with employers, she said.

More information is available at county and district K-State Research and Extension offices, and on its Website on aging: www.aging.ksu.edu.

Cattlemen win access to Mexico

Persistent cattlemen helped win access to Mexico for breeding cattle from the United States in an important trade victory this week. Agriculture Secretary Edward Schafer announced March 27 that Mexico has agreed to allow importation of breeding cattle from the United States born after Jan. 1, 1999, effective immediately. The National Cattlemen's Beef Association (NCBA) has long fought for fair and free international trade for U.S. cattle producers.

"The opening of the Mexican border has been long overdue and it is definitely a great win-win for both U.S. and Mexican cattlemen," said NCBA President Andy Groseta, an Arizona cattle producer. "Our seedstock producers can sell their superior genetics to Mexican cattlemen who are striving to improve the genetics of their cow herds. As we all know, many of the Mexican stocker and feed cattle come back to the U.S. So it is a win-win for all parties concerned."

Mexico denied access to U.S. breeding stock beginning Dec. 23, 2003, when the United States announced its first-ever case of bovine spongiform encephalopathy (BSE). Since that time, Mexico has only allowed importation of registered U.S. dairy heifers under the age of 24 months, despite in-depth international negotiations to include breeding stock. "This is a big win for U.S. cattle producers — and in particular — those in the seedstock community," said Gregg Doud, chief economist for NCBA. "Mexico is currently working to expand its herds, so this decision comes at a critical time."

Traditionally, the United States has shipped approximately $125 million annually in live cattle breeding stock to Mexico.

When the United States implemented the second Minimal Risk Regions Rule Nov. 19, 2007, it was widely believed Mexico would lift the restriction on breeding stock. But the situation remained unresolved until yesterday. Mexico continues to ban the import of beef and beef products from animals more than 30 months of age.

"The issue of over-30-month beef to Mexico has always been extremely sensitive politically," Doud said. "However, NCBA's expectation is that once Mexico receives its 'controlled risk' status from the World Organization for Animal Health (OIE), which is expected in May, then this issue should be resolved as well."

OIE recommendations, which are based on the latest science, provide guidelines for trade in cattle of any age, as well as beef and many other cattle products. These guidelines apply to all OIE risk country classifications for BSE with recommended mitigation measures appropriately applied to protect both human and animal health.

"Canada, Mexico and the United States have been engaged in candid, productive talks over the past two days," Secretary Schafer said. "We mutually agreed on the importance of normalizing beef and cattle trade in North America, consistent with the guidelines established by the World Organization for Animal Health."

Stress? what stress?

One third of the American workers queried in a 2001 study by Galinsky, Kim & Bond reported feeling chronically overworked. Most who participated in a study conducted by Clarksberg and Moen, also in 2001, reported working more hours than they would prefer.

While many who work in a stressful environment can find it difficult to leave work stress at work, Deb Sellers, Kansas State University Research and Extension specialist on adult development and aging, encourages mindful stress management.

"Leave work stress at work," Sellers said. "Focus on building a support network of family and friends outside of work."

"Making time for self is important to mental and physical health and is an essential need, rather than a luxury," she said.

More information on stress management is available by contacting a county or district K-State Research and Extension office.

Family farm activist scheduled to speak in Holton on April 10

Kansas Cattlemen's Association and area businesses are sponsoring an informational meeting and membership drive at the Jackson County 4-H building in Holton at 7:30 pm on April 10. This event is free and open to the public.

Mike Callicrate, a cattle producer and political activist, will be the key-note speaker addressing producers and community members regarding current industry events, including the purchase of National and Smithfield Beef by Brazilian company JBS.

Since the mid-1990s, Callicrate has been actively involved in social and political efforts to improve the welfare of family farms and to restore effective publicly-regulated markets. He was a founding member of several farm advocacy groups including the Organization for Competitive Markets, R-CALF, and the Kansas Cattlemen's Association. He also was a lead plaintiff in a class action lawsuit against the world's largest meatpacker, IBP (now Tyson Foods) alleging unfair and discriminatory marketing practices.

"Mike believes in supporting the family farmer and local rural communities. This is the same principle that KCA was founded on, and we hope that community members from Holton and the surrounding areas will come to listen to what Mike has to offer," remarked KCA Executive Director, Brandy Carter.

100% USA Beef hamburgers and refreshments will be provided by free will donation. There will be a small FUNdraiser auction after the speaking engagement, and KCA Vice President, David Pfrang, Past Vice President, Bruce Rinkes, and Brandy Carter will be in attendance to discuss the work KCA is doing this year.

KCA announces election results

The Kansas Cattlemen's Association producer members recently held elections by mail in ballot. Voting resulted in adding a new policy to the association as well as electing two new board members who will serve KCA for a three year term.

Overwhelmingly, KCA members voted in favor of supporting energy production that is vital to rural communities and producers in Kansas. This is an issue that KCA has not previously held policy on. Based on the membership input, KCA will now move forward in addressing this issue in Topeka and throughout Kansas.

As well as adding policy, Board elections took place. Two members of the Board have completed their three year term will be departing this year. Casey Kimberlin, Buffalo, and Dave Bowm an, Brewster, have both served on the Board since 2005.

As two Board members complete their terms, KCA welcomes its newest Board members, Perry Owens, and Hal Luthi.

Hal Luthi, Madison, is a partner in a three generation cattle operation with his father Harold and son Dallas. Luthi's operation backgrounds on the edge of the Flint Hills and maintains ownership in commercial feedlots in southwest Kansas. The Luthi family markets bulls from their black Simmental cowherd primarily by private treaty.

Perry Owens grew up in the cattle business watching and learning from his dad and other "old school" cattlemen on how to market cattle and not give them away. Owens has been involved in the feed yard side of the cattle business since 1979, and is currently managing Ottawa County Feeders, Inc. in Minneapolis.

USDA projects second-highest planted corn acreage total in more than 50 years

The recent prospective plantings report released by the U.S. Department of Agriculture indicates farmers are concerned about high input costs, according to the National Corn Growers Association (NCGA). The report says farmers intend to plant 86.014 million corn acres this year, an 8 percent drop from 2007's high acreage, yet the second-highest acreage intention since 1949, NCGA notes.

"We're always cautious when we review the March projections, because they are made before any seeds really enter the ground," said Ron Litterer, NCGA president. "The corn acreage projections also have a tendency to go up. Last year, for example, there was a difference of more than 3 million acres between the March estimate and the final number." Litterer pointed out USDA's March report has underestimated actual corn acres in the each of the last four years. "One thing farmers have told us this year, and something I've seen myself, are that growers are facing tremendously higher input costs -- particularly for fertilizer and diesel fuel," Litterer added. "We need access to more affordable sources of natural gas for fertilizer production and we're concerned about the impact of higher crude oil prices on farmer profitability."

The March USDA report would indicate approximately 79 million harvested acres. If the average trend yield of 155.5 bushels per acre is realized, corn producers would be on track to produce approximately 12.3 billion bushels in 2008 — the second-highest production ever. The USDA's June 30 report will provide a clearer view of 2008 corn acreage.

"Based on what we've heard from our growers, and if the weather goes our way, we're confident we will produce another good crop," Litterer said. "We're committed to meeting all needs — food, fuel, feed and fiber, and we are heartened by the trend toward higher yields that maximizes how much corn is produced per acre. Farmers are becoming more efficient and more productive."

Today's USDA report also noted that many previous corn acres are being planted in soybean, a common crop rotation. The projected 74.8 million acres would be the third-highest soybean acreage in history.

Farm and Ranch Agents!

Farmers National Company is looking for a few top farm and ranch agents in Kansas to join our growing national farm and ranch brokerage business. In the last four years we sold and closed over $1 billion of real estate sales, conducted over 500 live auctions since 2005, and currently have over $150 million of active farm and ranch listings.

We are not a franchise. We represent sellers and buyers every day in the world of agriculture. If you like the real estate business, land, and people then we need to talk. Rookie or pro let's meet soon to discuss our program. All inquiries will be kept confidential.

Yard & Garden Tips

By Gregg Eyestone

Rust disease on trees

Soon the eastern red cedar will turn a brilliant shade of orange. Every year in early April, galls that started two years ago on the juniper plant swell and produce the orange, one inch long tendrils. It is active during raining periods from now until the end of May.

The fungal spores from these fruiting bodies are going to susceptible hosts for the summer. Hosts are edible apples, crabapples, hawthorn and quince. Each host has a specific guest but their appearance to the eye is similar so they get lumped together as rust.

Rust injury on cedar (juniper) is minimal. There are plenty of cedars throughout our environment to prove that rust has little effect. Protecting the apples, crabapples, hawthorn and quince are of more importance. The rust disease can affect the leaves, stems and fruit. Leaves may fall off the tree prematurely and reduce the vigor of the affected plant.

A best management practice is to plant resistant varieties. Many of today's modern crabapple varieties are not affected by rust. 'Prairie Fire' is a good selection for our area. More information on crabapples is found in the publication "Flowering Crabapples" from K-State Research and Extension.

I planted the edible apple variety 'Enterprise' to prevent necessary sprays for rust. Other tolerant apple cultivars are 'Red Delicious,' 'Liberty,' 'Priscilla,' 'Redfree,' 'William's Pride,' and 'Freedom.' Edible apples may need managed for other diseases such as apple scab, fireblight and powdery mildew along with the rust.

Preventable sprays can reduce the injury to susceptible varieties like 'Jonathan,' 'Lodi,' 'Golden Delicious,' 'Winesap,' and others. Products containing one of these active ingredients will reduce rust infection. Look for myclobutanil, ziram, triadimefon, mancozeb or other labeled products. Read and follow pesticide label when using the product.

A spray treatment goes from now through the end of May to protect the apples. Come July and August the rust will go back to the cedar and junipers and that would be the time to treat them. The rust life cycle has been occurring for a long time. One option is to do nothing and just live with it.

You can find out more information on gardening by going to Riley County's K-State Research and Extension website at www.riley.ksu.edu or you may contact Gregg Eyestone at (785) 537-6350 or e-mail geyeston@ksu.edu.

Counting a key to grow plants from seed

For some gardeners, growing plants from seed is the ultimate satisfaction.

Chip Miller isn't one of them.

"Like the person who didn't buy green bananas, I've felt my time is growing too short for such long-range plans," said Miller, a horticulturist with Kansas State University Research and Extension.

He's got so many leftover seeds in storage, however, that he's thinking of trying again this year.

"All you have to do to figure out when to plant seeds is just count backwards," Miller said. "But, you also need to know when, on average, the odds no longer favor your getting another freeze."

To decide whether to plant seeds indoors or outside, risk-taking gardeners often use their average frost-free date - the day their area usually has 50-50 odds for more freezing cold. (Salina's is April 17.)

"If you don't know that date, you can just call your nearest county Extension office," Miller said.

Cautious gardeners won't plant outdoors, though, until their 95 percent frost-free date, when they have 5 percent odds for another freeze. The Kansas Weather Data Library maintains that date for weather stations statewide on the Web at <http://www.oznet.ksu.edu/wdl/freeze2.htm>. (Salina's is May 7.)

Miller said most seed packets provide several other facts needed for the backward counting:

The number of weeks of indoor growth required to raise seedlings ready to transplant outdoors.

How many weeks before or after last frost that seed and/or transplants can go into the garden.

How many days that food-producing plants need to produce harvest-ready fruits or vegetables.

"Sometimes that last fact determines whether you need to start seed indoors," Miller said. "But, sometimes gardeners just want to produce their own transplants, rather than spend money to buy some."

Miller's fact sheet on what's needed to start plants indoors successfully is on the Web at <http://www.oznet.ksu.edu/> (search for "2007 HortNews 118. pub").

Maple syrup makers once again collecting tree sap as weather warms

NEW LEBANON, N.Y. (AP) — On a recent warm, rainy day, tree sap trickled through hundreds of taps and down through miles of plastic tubing to Larry Benson's sugar shack.

It was official: Maple season has started again.

Benson, among hundreds of maple syrup makers busy checking lines and stoking fires as temperatures nudge up in northern states, boiled down the clear liquid into warm syrup amid clouds of maple-scented steam.

"It's like most any other type of farming," Benson said as he crunched through the snow in the sugar bush. "You can make a profit, but you have to work for it. I do it because I enjoy it. I have no other reason to be here."

More than a million gallons of syrup will likely be made this spring nationwide, much of it from small producers like Benson, a retired dairy farmer near the Massachusetts line who makes maple syrup as much for pleasure as profit.

Maple sap begins to flow when nights are cool and daytime temperatures creep toward the 40s. Maple makers must move fast to collect the sap and boil down 40 gallons for every gallon of syrup.

At Benson's Hand Hollow sugar shack, about a gallon of sap a minute was flowing. Benson kept feeding firewood into the evaporator and dipping a hydrometer into the warm syrup to check for quality.

Outside, Benson's friend, Gus Murray, patrolled the cat's cradle of plastic tubing strung among the trees in search of leaks.

"This came on in a hurry," said Murray, ready with a roll of tape to patch holes. "It went from nothing to 'Boom!' in no time."

There are miles of tubing here and sometimes fittings can loosen or a squirrel might nibble through. Murray had already helped Benson drill 800 holes in the trees and set taps a few weeks ago. Murray figures to get a few quarts for his work.

Sap runs a bit earlier for Hand Hollow since the south-facing sugar bush warms up sooner than others. But the scene will be played out all over the Northeast this month.

Almost 7.3 million taps were sunk into trees by American syrup producers last winter — more than three-quarters in New England and New York, according to federal agricultural statistics.

New York was No. 3 in maple production last year, behind Vermont and Maine. While larger producers might sink many thousands of taps, the market is full of farmers and other rural landowners who do it as a side business.

Benson got the bug decades ago when he was still a full-time dairy farmer. He started with a stovetop pan on his farm and now teams up with neighbor Christine Dreyfus to tap more than 10 acres of her land. She owns the sugar shack, a small building with a slate roof that puffs out big clouds of steam when the evaporator inside is fired up.

They share the output. Dreyfus will sell some from the shack and both give away bottles to friends.

Benson has hopes to produce 150 gallons of syrup this month before buds on the trees signal the running of darker, less desirable, sap.

"Anyone who spends $40 for a gallon of syrup better appreciate it because there's probably $42 of work in it," he said.

Some maple producers worry that warmer winters could hurt their operations. Sap ran in New York in early January 2007 during an unseasonable warm spell. But other longtime producers, like Benson, say they start collecting at about the same time they always have, on average.

In fact, conditions were generally too cold for optimal sap flow in New England last winter, while it was too warm in other states like New York and Wisconsin, according to a report from the National Agricultural Statistics Service in New England. Nationwide production was off 13 percent last year.

Kansas state fair announces the cattle supreme drive for 2008

The Kansas State Fair announces it will hold a "Supreme Drive" to salute the winners and exhibitors of the individual champions in the open beef cattle shows on Saturday, Sept. 13, 2008.

In 2007, a committee was formed from exhibitors and others involved in the beef cattle industry to improve the open beef shows at the Kansas State Fair.

Their goals include increasing the number of cattle shown, increasing the number of exhibitors, providing a great show for fairgoers, and providing marketing opportunities to individuals and companies involved in the beef industry.

With these goals in mind the open cattle show schedule has been adjusted to allow a Supreme Drive. To review the show schedule revisions, visit www.kansasstatefair.com. Nine breeds will show and the champion bull and female from each breed will compete for the overall bull and female. There will be a total of eighteen winning exhibitors. The premiums include $1,000 awarded to the overall champion bull, sponsored by Travalong, and $1,000 awarded to the overall champion female, sponsored by Titan West. In addition, the eighteen breed champions will qualify to win the use of an OK Corral for a year and the use of a Travalong show trailer for a year. The Kansas State Fair open breeding cattle shows are open to all exhibitors.

In addition to the Supreme Drive, the Kansas Fairgrounds Foundation will recognize the 2008 Wall of Honor inductees at the September 13 event. These inductees are great Kansas cattlemen who represent the Kansas cattle industry.

Following the Wall of Honor presentations, the Supreme Drive will be held and the overall champion bull and female will be crowned. Following, a social and meal will be provided. Tickets for the Supreme Meal can be purchased on line or on the exhibitors entry form. For more information on the Supreme Drive visit, www.kansasstatefair.com.

Researchers study playa lakes over the Ogallala

Are the tens of thousands of playa lakes that dot the Southern High Plains key to keeping the Ogallala Aquifer's dwindling waters clean? That's the question Agricultural Research Service (ARS) plant physiologist Dennis Gitz is asking about North America's largest aquifer.

Playas are ephemeral lakes that form when rainwater fills natural clay depressions in the landscape.

Gitz found that this water flows continually downward, if slowly, into the Ogallala, contributing to its recharge.

The recharge rate for cropland over the Ogallala is negligible, which is why there is so much concern for this practically finite source of water.

Part of the playas question is whether the recharge rate is significant enough for them to be protected with filtering borders of gamagrass or switchgrass. If so, the grass borders would ensure that playas continue to add significant amounts of clean water to the Ogallala and help extend its useful life.

To measure the recharge rate of the Ogallala for both cropland and playas, Gitz and colleagues from Texas Tech University are using soil thermometers to track rainwater's downward movement through soil. The thermometers track rainwater by detecting sudden changes in temperature where rainwater stops seeping. The scientists proved the thermometer idea works in a study that showed a good agreement between thermometer readings and actual water infiltration readings. Thermometers are much less expensive than other methods of tracking rainwater infiltration.

Gitz has installed a bank of instruments at 14 playas and is developing instruments for 16 more. These include instruments for weather stations, as well as for measuring water levels. He will use data from these instruments to calculate expected water evaporation rates for comparison to actual water losses. The difference shows the amount of water that has infiltrated the soil below the lakes.

If the recharge rate for playas turns out to be negligible, farmers could consider managing them for rangeland or recreational use.

Growers offer concerns, ideas on futures market

Two NAWG grower-leaders told market participants and overseers Thursday that the commodity futures market is not reflecting market fundamentals, posing risks to local elevators and the producers who utilize them.

NAWG Second Vice President Jerry McReynolds, a wheat producer in Woodston and Domestic and Trade Policy Committee Chairman Bing Von Bergen, a wheat producer in Moccasin, Mont., made the comments by teleconference as part of a Commodity Markets Council forum on futures market issues.

The producers told other participants that growers are pleased about high commodity prices seen in recent months, but also very concerned about potential producer-level impacts including magnified exposure to margin calls, the potential failure of local elevators and the complications caused in market function by large infusions of speculative capital.

"While enjoying the higher prices brought about by recent events, our members have serious concerns about the functioning of these markets," the producers said in prepared remarks. "We believe that failure to apply appropriate limits to certain classes of speculative investors have interfered with the markets' function as risk management tools for grain producers and other hedgers."

NAWG leaders also made a number of recommendations to the Council, including subjecting index funds to the same position limits applied to speculators and revisiting the recent decision to expand speculative position limits. McReynolds and Von Bergen suggested that the exchanges look into ways to provide more delivery flexibility to improve convergence between cash and futures; done correctly, they suggested, it should provide a dose of reality and discipline to the market. The growers also expressed NAWG's opposition to a recent proposal that would merge the Commodity Futures Trading Commission and the Securities and Exchange Commission.

McReynolds will also be traveling to Washington, D.C., later in the month to represent NAWG in a separate forum on futures markets with the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, scheduled for April 22.

NAWG's full comments to the Commodity Markets Council forum are available at: <http://www.wheatworld.org/pdf/Commodity%20Futures%20Testimony.pdf>.

K-State study shows no health benefit to keeping just-weaned calves

A study by Kansas State University researchers indicated that calves shipped just after separation from their dams grew and stayed as healthy as calves that were kept on the ranch for varying amounts of time up to 60 days.

In the study, summer-weaned beef calves (Angus crosses, weighing 400 pounds) were separated by age, said K-State Research and Extension animal nutritionist K.C. Olson. They were assigned to one of five weaning periods that corresponded to the length of time (60, 45, 30, 15 and 0 days) between separation from dams and shipment to an auction market.

Olson and graduate student Justin Bolte conducted the study.

All calves were fed the same diet-free choice throughout the trial and were monitored twice daily for symptoms of respiratory disease. They were vaccinated against common diseases 14 days before separation from dams and again on the day of separation.

On a common shipping date (day 0, Aug. 24, 2007), the calves were transported three hours to a commercial auction market, where they were held for 14 hours. Then they were moved to a feedlot an hour away.

The body condition of the dams was assessed 60 days before and 60 days after the shipping.

"The bottom line," Olson said, "is that under the conditions of our study, ranch-of-origin weaning periods of between 15 and 60 days did not improve calf health or growth performance, relative to shipping calves immediately after maternal separation."

More information about the study is available by contacting K.C. Olson at (785) 532-1254 or kcolson@ksu.edu or K-State animal science researcher Twig Marston at (785) 532-5428 or twig@ksu.edu.
