

The Blind Mare

It all began, as so many interesting things do, at a horse sale. We were in Iowa on business, and it happened to be at the same time as the big Pony Of the Americas (POA) annual sale. Now, I consider myself a Quarter Horse man. With all due respect to other breeds, I believe the Quarter Horse in general is ideal for tending cows and riding for pleasure. Nothing beats a good, athletic, cowy Quarter Horse. When it comes to color, the sorrels and bays appeal to my eye. My wife, on the other hand, likes lots of color. She prefers a flashy Paint or a brightly spotted Appaloosa (This might explain the mix of colors you find around our ranch). At the time of the Iowa horse sale, several years ago, we were in the market for ponies for the kids. Her family believed that every kid should have a pony, which is a sentiment I agree with wholeheartedly (unless I'm the one buying feed). So while I was off on business, she and her friend went to the POA sale. Guess what: They bought spotted horses. POAs often have a lot of color and spots on them. They are a slightly smaller, generally well-dispositioned breed of horse, which makes them ideal for kids. Actually, my wife made good choices at the horse sale. The new acquisitions were named Tango, Baby Doll, and Cindy. Tango and Baby Doll have been very good for the kids, but Cindy seemed to be a different matter. She was already broke but hadn't been ridden in a while, they said. Since she was big enough for me to ride, I thought I'd get her restarted. Unfortunately, the cinch broke while I was on her. Nothing major was permanently hurt except my pride. Still, Cindy seemed jumpy. Sometime later, I observed Cindy bump into something and I wondered about it. I thought maybe she was just distracted. But when a college girl came out to ride, she commented about Cindy's flightiness in the pen. And when the vet came next, she confirmed our fears: Cindy had gone blind. What do you do with a blind mare? Can't sell her. Can't use her. Fortunately, she produced a nice, fully sighted colt. As the vet said, being a brood mare is going to be her only job from now on. So Cindy remains ensconced at the ranch. I marvel at how she can navigate pens and gates. It's almost miraculous how well that mare can do in these surroundings. Meanwhile, I did some more checking on that horse's history. The most interesting thing was when I looked into her name. "Where'd you get the name Cindy?" I asked the previous owner. "Oh," she replied, "That's short for Incendiary..." Great. Is this horse still under warranty?

Horse Tradin'
by Ron Wilson, Poet Lariat
From all my years of buyin' horses, I've learned to be skeptical of the sources. A horse trader'll make a far-fetched claim, When attracting buyers is the aim. For example: the horse is lame, blind, and his teeth aren't so hot, But hey, "He's current on all his shots." Or the ad says, "Green broke," which means in essence, That this colt saw a halter from a distance once. If "Experienced riders only" is what the ad will show, Then be ready for a major rodeo. The horse bites, hates trailers, and has a sway-backed seat, But the trader says, "Well, he picks up his feet." Which leads me to my final question, of course: Would anybody out there like to buy a "good horse"? Happy Trails! © Copyright 2010

Climbing to the top — McPherson County Feeders wins CAB 2010 Feedlot Partner of the Year

Lyndee Patterson

Success is not a summit at the top of some mountain, but rather the continuous process of climbing that hill.

Allan Sents, owner and manager of McPherson County Feeders Inc. (MCF), near Marquette, faces the uphill journey every day. In 1981 he joined his father and other local investors to purchase the yard that he enrolled cattle made 31% CAB and Prime. This year MCF won the CAB Feedlot Partner of the Year Award for those with less than 15,000-head capacity, for the second time since 2005. The owners traveled to the annual CAB conference Sept. 30 to Oct. 2 in San Juan, Puerto Rico, to accept the award.

Being a CAB partner offers MCF much more than another plaque for the tionships with their customers and stay knowledgeable about their operations.

Vince Bengston, Windom, started finishing and selling his cattle on a grid through MCF a decade ago as an alternative to selling calves at auction, and he's been a customer there ever since. The closeouts and harvest reports Bengston gets from the feedlot and CAB help him make improvements. He uses them in all aspects big or small, whether making a modification to his feed ration or changing the way he selects and manages cattle. While Sents wants to help ranchers make genetic advancements, he is always looking for ways to improve his cattle feeding techniques as well. That's an advantage to being a CAB partner.

"We've been working with Gary Fike, beef specialist with CAB, on researching implant programs — studying their effects on performance, quality grade and profitability," Sents says.

In the five years since MCF last won this CAB award, Sents has kept improving cattle and results, but the process has had its share of setbacks. When the Emporia, Tyson plant closed, it took away the primary market for MCF cattle.

"That older, smaller plant was equipped to handle smaller groups of cattle, and we could sort more aggressively with them," Sents says.

Even though they can't market their partial loads to the large plants, Sents and Shaw are adjusting. They've amended their process by using tag transfers to break out the ownership.

Shaw's college livestock judging experience has also proven useful for dealing with sorting issues. "It's a great advantage to have another set of eyes," Sents says. "It allows for more awareness of how the cattle are performing and for reaching an optimum target." Customers' continued improvement in herd genetics is helping them reach the desired grades as well. In the coming years Sents wants the percentage of customers focused on Angus genetics to increase. "It's a little more exciting and challenging to handle cattle that have more value potential and then be able to give customers that feedback."

Cow herd improvement was the reason Bengston started feeding at MCF, and it is one of the many reasons he continues to do so today. "I've been working hard to build a high-quality herd, and with Allan's help we're getting there."

Sents plans to keep helping customers climb their hills, and with his management, McPherson County Feeders is on track to maintain its progress on that successful, upward journey.

MCF became a Certified Angus Beef LLC (CAB) licensed partner in 1999, enrolling more than 73,700 cattle in the Feedlot Licensing Program since then. Last year, the 6,408

Lack of rain in western Kansas hampers wheat emergence

With much of the wheat crop planted in western Kansas, farmers are now waiting and hoping for rain to help the crop get established. Most of the western third of the state is mired in an extended dry period, causing poor emergence and spotty stands of the fledgling wheat crop.

"I would rate the crop as poor to average," says David Schemm, vice president of the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers and a farmer near Sharon Springs. "Some wheat was planted into moisture and it looks okay, but there is very little subsoil moisture to keep that crop going."

Schemm reckons that some wheat fields from Goodland to Garden City and the Colorado border to Hays have benefitted from isolated rain showers in the last month. But many fields in that region — which represents more than a third of the state's average wheat production — have spotty stands, due to too little moisture. "I'm not too optimistic about the wheat crop in this area," Schemm says.

Kansas State University research shows that, the later the crop emerges in the fall or spring, the greater the yield reduction the following summer. Reductions in test weight and kernel size combine with increased environmental stress to be leading factors in yield reductions at harvest, says Jim Shroyer, one of the investigators in the research project, which covered several western Kansas counties in 2000.

"Although tiller and head numbers were not determined in this study, it is generally accepted that late-emerged wheat plants, caused by late planting dates or delayed germination and emergence, develop fewer tillers and productive heads than wheat planted at optimal dates. This results in lower yield," explains Shroyer, Extension agronomist at K-State.

In its Oct. 12 Crop Progress Report, Kansas Agricultural Statistics says just 30% of the western third of Kansas has adequate subsoil moisture. Heading into winter, the crop could be dangerously dry. "The young wheat should be taking in moisture soon, but there is none there," Schemm says. "And I'm also concerned about winterkill, which is worse in dry conditions than when the soil profile is full of moisture."

The dry conditions have prompted many farmers to postpone planting wheat as long as possible, at least until rain is forecast. Shroyer advises farmers to resume planting, but to increase seeding rate to compensate for lost tillers. "Also, consider using a fungicide seed treatment, and a starter fertilizer," he says. "The idea is to make sure the wheat gets off to a good start and will have enough heads to have good yield potential, assuming it will eventually rain and the crop will emerge late."

Wheat that emerges in November almost always has fewer fall tillers than wheat that emerges in September or October."

The dry spell is tempering some of the enthusiasm farmers had for wheat this summer, when western Kansas farmers harvested an above average crop and prices surged to two-year highs. "I think I'm taking 20% off my yield for next year because I don't have an even stand," Schemm explains. "Even if we do get a rain, it's too late for the wheat to tiller this fall. Unless we get ideal weather next spring, we're looking at quite a reduction in yield."

“Connecting Cows, Carbon and Carrots: Making Sense of Our Food Future” conference planned for November

The Kansas Rural Center (KRC) will hold its Sustainable Agriculture Conference on Saturday, November 20, 2010, at the Flint Hills Technical College, Emporia. The theme for this year's conference is “Connecting Cows, Carbon and Carrots: Making Sense of Our Food Future.”

KRC is hosting the one-day conference of speakers and workshops for people interested in learning more about climate change and its challenges for agriculture, the budding “food movement” of local and regional production and business opportunities, how to approach the transfer of land to the next generation, plus many more ways of “connecting cows, carbon, and carrots.”

The morning keynote speaker will be Joel Brown, who will speak on “Climate Change and Agriculture — the Challenges and the Responses.” Brown is a range-land ecologist in New Mexico for the USDA Natural Resources Service, where he is involved in research and development of land classification systems, carbon sequestration on range-lands, and grazing land ecology. He also works as the CSIRO (Australia) Project Leader and scientist, and NRCS Global Change Leader and Cooperating Scientist with the ARS Jornada Experimental Range.

“Climate change, whether natural or human caused, presents some serious challenges to agriculture. Agricultural producers are very familiar with responding to variable climate,” states Brown. “However, projected increases in climate variability will require an even more flexible approach to management.” According to Brown, an important aspect of responding is a realistic assessment of the risks, and development of responses and decision systems to address needed changes.

Brown spoke on climate change and the impact on agriculture at the 2002 Kansas Sustainable Agriculture Conference, providing an early perspective on what would be an issue of growing importance. Two other featured speakers for a roundtable discussion of climate and agriculture are Karl Brooks, U.S. EPA Region 7 Director, and Jeff Schahczenski, Policy Analyst for the National Center for Alternative Technology (NCAT).

Eighteen workshops following the four tracks of Cows and Crops (farming practices), Carbon (carbon, climate and farming practices), Carrots (local food and marketing), and Connections (politics of food) will be held throughout the day. These will cover a wide range of topics including: Ecological Approaches to Farming; Trends in Production and Marketing of Grass-fed Beef; Opportunities for Local and Regional Food in Kansas; Growing Healthy: School and Community Gardens; Kansas Smoke Management; Melding Legislation and Production Practices to Preserve Prairie Ecosystems; Food Policy Councils; Hoop Houses 101; Patch-Burn Grazing the Prairies of Kansas; Cover Crops: The Next Frontier in Farming; Intergenerational Farm Transitions: Planning for Success; and the 2012 Farm Bill: What Does the Future Hold?

The conference will be held at the Flint Hills Technical College 3301 W. 18th Ave., Emporia from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Cost is $20 per person, which will cover lunch, snacks and materials. Registration is limited to the first 150 persons, and the deadline for registrations is Monday November 15. A detailed agenda with presenters listed is available at the KRC website. Online registration is also available at the website, www.kansasruralcenter.org, where you may register online and pay by credit card or print out a registration form and mail it and your check in. Or contact the KRC office at 785-873-3431, or ddysart@rainbowtel.net, for more information.

This farm, 155 acres, more or less, consists of 45 acres river bottom cropland, 52 acres upland cropland in two fields, 3.24 acres CRP in the northwest part west of the old railroad, 6 acres hay meadow and waterways, and about 49 acres timber, Little Blue River and excellent wildlife habitat.

The 45 acres below the old railroad has been flood irrigated for many years. The priority date of the water right is May 26, 1977. The permit is for 865 gallons per minute for 72 acre feet.

The 45 acres bottom cropland field is all Muir soils, while the cropland above the railroad, about 52 acres, is about ½ Muir bottom land and ½ Tully moderately sloping upland soils. The triangular shaped tract west of the railroad is approximately 14.4 acres.

The CRP annual payment is $169.00. The contract expires on September 30, 2020. The CRP is in native grass. All the cropland is on the east side of the river.

The old irrigation pump and pipe go with the farm. The FSA bases and yields are 55.6 acres corn, 134 bushels; 44.7 acres milo, 78 bushels. The estimated 2009 taxes were $1,085.78.

This tract, 75 acres, more or less, is all native grass. Spence Avenue and the Union Pacific Railroad divide the pasture in two. There is a large culvert that serves as an under pass for cattle. NAP application closing date Dec. 1 for certain crops

Adrian J. Polansky, state executive director for USDA's Farm Service Agency in Kansas, reminds producers of the application closing date for certain crops under the Noninsured Crop Disaster Assistance Program (NAP). Crops eligible for NAP benefits are limited to those not insurable in the county and are produced for food or fiber.

December 1 is the final date to pay the applicable service fee and obtain NAP coverage for all grasses including alfalfa, apricots, asparagus, blueberries, caneberries (blackberries and raspberries), cherries, clover, grapes, lespedeza, honey, mixed forage, nectarines, oats, peaches, plums, strawberries, and vetch.

The administrative service fee is $250 per crop per administrative county not to exceed $750 per producer per administrative county and a $1875 maximum fee for multi-county producers. Interested producers must pay the fee and file form CCC-471, Application for Coverage, by the application closing deadline.

This coverage entitles eligible producers to a payment of 55 percent of an average market price for the commodity if a natural disaster caused a 50 percent production loss or greater of an eligible crop.

Producers must obtain NAP coverage on non-insurable crops and purchase crop insurance on insurable crops to remain eligible for the supplemental disaster assistance programs.

Interested producers shall contact their local Farm Service Agency prior to the December 1 application closing date to obtain NAP coverage.

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crofts

The U.S. Dollar Index may have scored a temporary low on Friday. The Dollar Index made a new low for the move following Ben Bernanke's comments on further monetary easing and the need for a higher rate of inflation. After that the dollar rebounded and the Index finished the day higher posting an outside day higher on the chart. The market is oversold following a month and a half of persistent weakness, so some sort of correction is warranted, but so far there is no reason to believe that the long term trend is changing.

The corn market shot higher on Monday and posted solid gains on Tuesday, but after making a new high for the move early Wednesday, the December corn made three lower closes in a row. The December corn moved up $.1334 from the October 4th low to Wednesday's high, so the market is due for a pause. For the week the December corn gained 34 3/4 cents.

Monday, traders will be watching the chart gap left last week. It is very likely that we will go down and test the $5.55 support in the December corn and if it holds the market will shoot higher once again. If it doesn't hold then we have to look for the market to fall to the bottom of the gap at $5.28 3/4. I don't think there is any reason for a trend change, but the potential for strength in the U.S. Dollar means there is potential for a deeper correction in the corn. At this point, corrections are buying opportunities, and I still look for the December corn to eventually test resistance at $5.93 and then $6.20.

Export sales were solid at 906,000 MT for the old crop and 274,300 MT for the new crop. Sales at this level and more than enough to meet the current USDA estimate and another month of sales near the 1 MMT mark would cause USDA to reconsider the cut they made to the export estimate in the October supply and demand report.

The front months of the wheat were under some pressure last week. The market never really built upon the previous Friday's sharp move higher and the December KW eventually lost 13 1/2 cents for the week. The July KW fared better and ended up only 2 1/2 cents lower for the week.

There is growing concern about the dry weather in a large part of the HRW growing region. Planting conditions are poor and a short crop next summer could eliminate the large surplus of wheat that we have now. I get the feeling that short traders are getting nervous about their positions and it wouldn't take much to shake them out of their positions.

The charts suggest that we could have large gains ahead of us. If we start to see new contract highs in the July KW, it would not be out of the question to see gains of $1-$2 fairly quickly. We have had two and a half months of sideways trade, which can begin to lull traders into complacency, but we have to be prepared for that complacency to come to an end and for some excitement to return to the wheat market.

Export sales were poor last week at 377,000 MT, which may be one of the reasons that the wheat didn't break out to the upside on Friday. Good demand gets traders attention and sales have been inconsistent recently. A combination of good exports and dry weather would be explosive.

This is a good time to look at long strategies in the wheat. Kansas City wheat options are sometimes difficult to trade, but now is the time to make an effort. Try to put on the $8.00 - $10.50 July KW bull call spread for 50 cents.

The soybeans were strong last week. The beans failed to hold gains on Friday, but were still 50 cents higher for the week. I look for some corrective action to start next week, but breaks are for buying as long as we keep selling beans. In the short run, look for the November soybeans to move up to the $12.20 area before expiration. For the July contract, a reasonable objective is the $12.80 area, followed by $14.00. If we see another cut in the yield estimate the July beans will make a run at the contract high of $15.70. Exposures were huge last week at 1.11 MMT and they will be huge again this week as well. Meal and oil sales were strong, so the whole complex is seeing great demand. This year's sales pace is blowing away last year's record pace and it is interesting to note that cumulative sales have reached 857 million bushels and we are only 6 weeks into the crop year. Total sales for the 05/06 crop year were only 940 million.

Cash cattle jumped $2.00 last week to the $97 level, which gave the futures market a big shot in the arm Thursday night and Friday. The December LC struggled with the resistance at the 40 and 50 day moving averages this week until the cash cattle trade took place. Friday's breakout took the December contract to the highest level since September 21st and the market looks set for further gains. Look for new contract highs in the December contract sometime in the next week or so. The February contract is near the highs and the contracts from April forward are already making new highs. The pause in the corn market rally and the strength in the live cattle, gave the feeder cattle market a much needed shot in the arm. The potential for further strength in the corn may limit the upside potential in the feeders, but I think it is reasonable to expect the January feeders to move back to $113 in the short run. Buy the December LC at $100 or better and look for new contract highs. Lift any feeder cattle hedges and look to replace them at a higher level.

Help decorative pumpkins last

Waiting until just before Halloween or Thanksgiving to buy a pumpkin can seem old-fashioned. Given how early pumpkins go on display and how long they stay there, today's varieties appear to have real staying power. The supply implies the orangey orbs might as well be helping with decorations, rather than waiting for weeks on a store shelf.

"Plant breeders are, in fact, always working to develop pumpkins with a longer shelf life. You have to remember, though, that store displays aren't static. Replacement stock keeps coming in until the season is almost over. Pumpkins that go bad disappear," said Ward Upham, horticulturist with Kansas State University Research and Extension.

To help eager buyers identify pumpkins with the best odds for lasting, Upham developed the following list of characteristics. The best pumpkins will be:

* Whole, which can include pumpkins with a painted face. Carved jack-o-lanterns do well to last a week.

* Stemmed. This is most important for outdoor pumpkins. Lost stems leave a depression behind that will collect water, snow, and/or ice and then promote spoilage. "That's why no one should ever carry a pumpkin by its stem," Upham said, "even while they're shopping."

* Dry-stemmed. Almost all commercial varieties now have green stems, so "mature" stem color no longer matters. If a stem is leaking sap, however, that indicates the pumpkin was too young for harvesting.

* Fully mature. Size, rind color and shape aren't usable criteria anymore, either. But, buyers still can try to pierce the rind with a thumbnail. That's easy with immature pumpkins and difficult with those that are ripe.

"The rind has to be hard enough to keep moisture from escaping. Otherwise, the pumpkin will shrivel," the horticulturist explained.

* Blemish-free with no soft spots. This characteristic does not include the bumps and hard "pimples" that are natural for some varieties. Instead, it's the results of injuries that have damaged pumpkin tissues and perhaps provided access for bacteria or led to "scarring."

"We started getting more smooth varieties when pumpkin painting first became popular," Upham said. "A lot of people still like the bumps and 'warts,' though. Some think they're more naturalistic-looking. Others use them to make decorations 'scarier'"

* Cured – which can be difficult to assess if store owners didn't check into that, so can't answer questions. Holiday fans who select their pumpkin in a field, however, should cure it for about 10 days, preferably in temperatures of 80-85 F and a relative humidity of 80-85 percent. "Just doing the best you can at creating those conditions will help," the horticulturist said.

* Dry and cool. Cured pumpkins don't like to be wet. And, although they like being cool, harvested pumpkins respond badly to cold weather. They start to degrade when temperatures fall below 50 degrees. They turn into mush overnight when they freeze.

"That's something to keep in mind when you look over a pumpkin display. Store owners may be having indoor space problems, but they still need to find ways to store their pumpkins well," Upham said. "After all, a century ago, you would have had your own pumpkin harvest. And, you would have put it in the attic, because your basement or root cellar was too damp. "Keeping pumpkins dry and cool is also something to keep in mind when you're using pumpkins outdoors. To keep them in good shape, you'll need to keep them out of expected rainfalls and bring them in whenever the nights are cold."

Evaluate wheat stands to determine options

By Jim Shroyer, Extension Agronomy State Leader

Where wheat emergence is uneven or poor, producers will have to decide whether to replant. This decision is not always clear-cut, but some guidelines can help with the decision. Is the stand count below normal, and if so, by how much? The first step is to determine what is normal.

If a producer uses a drill with 12-inch row spacings, plants at a 60-pounds-per-acre seeding rate with a variety that has 15,000 seeds per pound, and expects a germination and emergence rate of 75 to 80 percent, there should be 675,000 to 720,000 plants per acre. This amounts to about 15.5 to 16.5 plants per foot of row. If a grower planted 60 pounds of seed per acre using 7.5-inch rows, and a germination rate of 75 to 80 percent, that would be about 9 plants per foot or row.

The next step is to determine the average number of plants per foot of row that is present by taking numerous plant counts across the field. This assumes the stand is more or less uniform throughout the field, with no large gaps. Generally, if the average number of plants is about 50 percent or more of normal, the recommendation is to keep the stand. With less than 40 percent of normal, the recommendation is to replant the field. With a stand that is between 40 and 50 percent of normal, the decision is more difficult.

There are two major concerns to consider other than yield potential in deciding whether to replant:

the susceptibility of the ground to wind erosion and the potential for weed and grass infestations. Where stands are less than 40 percent of normal, these become major concerns, even if yield potential is not a concern. In fact, research in western Kansas indicates that 260,000 to 320,000 plants per acre (or about six to seven plants per foot of row) can produce within 90 percent of expected yields — especially if the plants are able to tiller well and the stand is uniform. But if the soil is blowing or weeds and grass infestations become severe, the stand should probably have been replanted and thickened. Where the stand is 30 to 40 percent of normal, the yield potential will have been reduced enough that replanting will usually pay off. If possible, replanting should be done at a 45 degree angle to the original stand to minimize damage to the existing stand.

Until the end of October, producers could cross-drill at the rate of 30-40 pounds per acre in western Kansas and 40-60 pounds per acre in central and eastern Kansas, using a double-disc opener drill if at all possible to minimize damage to the existing stand. If the replanting is done in November or later, increase the seeding rates to 60-75 pounds per acre in western Kansas and 75-90 pounds per acre in central Kansas. If stands are less than 30 percent of normal, increase the seeding rates just mentioned by 20-30 pounds per acre. If a hoe drill is used, the seeding rate should be higher than if a disc drill is used because the hoe drill will destroy much of the original stand. With a hoe drill, add about 20-30 pounds per acre to the seeding rates mentioned above.

Where there was no emergence in all or parts of the field, producers would have to use a slightly higher seeding rate than used initially — 75 to 90 pounds per acre in western Kansas and 100 to 120 pounds in eastern and central Kansas, using the higher end of those ranges when planting in November or later. Seeding rates on non-irrigated fields should not be higher than 90 lbs./acre in western Kansas or 120 lbs./acre in central and eastern Kansas. Under irrigation, seeding rates should never be higher than 150 lbs./acre.

Before replanting, producers should first dig through the soil crust to determine why the seed did not emerge. The most common emergence problems are dry soils, crusting, poor quality seed, seedling rot diseases, and wireworms. If dry soils are the cause of the problem, which is the most likely situation this year, replanting will do no good unless the seed has partially germinated and stalled out before emerging. If the seed are still hard and viable, or have a very short coleoptile emerging from the seed, the best advice is to leave the field alone and wait for rain.

Where crusting has occurred, producers should determine whether the seeds or seedlings are still viable or the coleoptiles have become bent or crinkled due to the crusting. Sometimes a light rain on crusted soil will soften the crust so seedlings can emerge. Otherwise, a rotary hoe will break up the crust, allowing them to emerge. If there has been adequate moisture and no crusting, poor quality seed, seedling rot diseases, or soil insects are possible causes of the problem. In this case, the field will need to be replanted with good quality, treated seed.

'Field to Fork' workshop to guide ag producers, others interested in marketing food products

Kansas State University and Butler Community College are teaming up to offer "Field to Fork and Recipe to Reality – Bringing Your Food Product to Market," a Nov. 9 conference focused on giving agricultural producers and others information about commercializing a food product.

The conference will be from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. at the K-State Research and Extension Sedgwick County education center at 7001 W. 21st St. North in Wichita. Experts in the food processing, regulations, labeling, marketing, distribution and business development will give presentations and be on hand to discuss what it takes to bring a food product to market.

"This is for anyone who is interested in sharing great tastes with the world and making money in the process," said Tonya Bronleewe, Sedgwick County Extension educator. The event, sponsored by K-State Research and Extension and Butler's Kansas Small Business Development Center, is funded in part by the U.S. Small Business Administration.

Mark and Nancy Galoway of Blacksmith Coffee Roastery will give a keynote presentation about developing their business in Lindsborg. Other featured presentations include:

- "Food Labeling and Regulation" – David Arvelo, small business representative, U.S. Food and Drug Administration;

- "Best Food Practices" – Fadi Aramouni, food scientist, Kansas State University; and

- "Planning and Promoting Your Food Business" – KSBDCC consultants.

Other presentations include: "Food Trends That

Will Shape Your Business," "The Basics of Starting Your Own Food Business," "Writing an Effective Business Plan," "Distributing and Marketing Your Food Product," and "Avoiding Production Pitfalls in a Growing Business." The fee to attend the conference is

$30, and it includes breakfast, beverages and a barbeque lunch. Online registration is available at <http://fieldtofork.eventbrite.com>. More information is available by calling the Sedgwick County Extension Education Center at 316-660-0100.

The supreme champion heifer and grand champion Angus at the Supreme Drive at the Kansas State Fair was McCurry Blackcap 9024, owned by McCurry Angus Ranch, Burrton and Tanner Rayl, Hutchinson.

Promote your farm business with social media

Are you confused by Facebook, Twitter, blogging, and other social media? Would you like to start using one or more of these tools to better market your farm business? Marketing Your Farm Business with Social Media will explain the basics of common types of social media while exploring ways that it can help market your farm products. The class will discuss telling your farm story, educating consumers about your products, building a "buzz" about your business, and using social media to market your products up to the second!

The class will be held on November 16, 2010 from 7:00-8:30 p.m. at the Sedgwick County Extension Education Center Sunflower Room, 7001 W. 21st St. North, Wichita. If you are able, please bring a laptop to the class. Other computers will be available for use by a limited number of participants. Cost of the class is $5. Call 316-660-0100 to register.

Angus cattle and YouTube: 300,000 views and counting

American Angus Association's YouTube channel achieved a significant milestone last week: 300,000 total views.

YouTube, a social media website where Internet users can upload and share videos, is playing an increasingly influential role for both pro- and anti-agricultural groups.

The Association has developed its YouTube presence into an important vehicle for advancing agriculture's positive story to both rural and urban Internet users.

Currently, the Angus channel is receiving between 700 and 1,000 views per day — up significantly from last year's 250 views per day.

"Right now, our YouTube channel allows us to share our story with people around the world," says Eric Grant, Association director of public relations. "In addition to our accelerating presence on nationwide television, we are now reaching a very wide audience every hour of every day through our use of YouTube. Not only has it allowed us to promote the Angus breed, but also inform our members and others about Association programs and services."

Several newly posted videos can be viewed on www.angus.org, the Association's website. To locate them on YouTube, visit www.youtube.com, and use the search terms "I Am Angus."

Top 20 Limousin producers recognized

The North American Limousin Foundation (NALF) has compiled the statistics for its recently completed fiscal year and released its list of top 20 active breeders. Together, they registered more than 7,000 Limousin and Lim-Flex® calves.

"These top 20 Limousin breeders represent a strong contingent of performance minded breeders across the country," said Bob Hough, Ph.D., Executive Vice President for NALF. "I commend the loyalty and commitment of these and all of our members for their dedication to make Limousin the perfect cross for British-based cow herds. Combined, they are the lifeblood and reason for our increased breed success."

Coming in at number 9 on the list was Ratliff's Cherry Creek Farms, Westphalia. P Bar S Ranch, Sand Springs, Okla., was 10th and Lonely Valley Limousin, Creston, Neb., was 13th. Express Limousin Ranch, Yukon of Okla. came in 16th. Other states represented include Colorado, South Dakota, Montana, Missouri, Wisconsin and Iowa.

Research conducted by NALF and Colorado State University (CSU) indicates trustworthy pedigrees, performance data and genetic predictions add about $400 to the value of Limousin and Lim-Flex bulls sold at auction.

Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) Chief Dave White recently announced the ranking period cut-off date for producer applications in NRCS' Conservation Stewardship Program (CSP) has been extended to January 7, 2011.

“We’re extending the deadline for applications to CSP to provide agricultural producers more time to complete their applications,” said White. “This will help farmers, ranchers, and forestry producers by giving them more time and hopefully allow even more producers to

“With the additional time, farmers can use the CSP self-screening checklist to determine if CSP is suitable for their operation and then go to their NRCS office and sign-up for CSP,” said Eric B. Banks, NRCS State Conservationist in Kansas.

The CSP checklist highlights basic information about CSP eligibility requirements, contract obligations, and potential payments. It is available from local NRCS offices or online at <http://www.nrcs.usda>.

"The CSP has proven popular with stewardship-minded and conservation-conscious Kansas producers who have been stewards of the land for over 75

All producers are encouraged to apply for CSP. The program, authorized in the 2008 Farm Bill, offers payments to producers who maintain a high level of conservation on their land and who agree to adopt higher levels of stewardship. Eligible lands include cropland, pastureland, rangeland, and nonindustrial forestland.

We sold 1481 cattle October 12. We had a good run of high quality calves for the Angus Influence sale, and there was good demand for the calves.
