

Herefords in demand: sales increase in numbers, prices

Hereford breeders continued to experience increased demand for Hereford genetics during the 2011 American Hereford Association (AHA) fiscal year that ended Aug. 31. The Association experienced a dramatic increase in production sale prices while reports of private-treaty sales were the highest in years.

A total of 165 Hereford production sales were reported by AHA field representatives this fiscal year. Bull sales averaged $3,937, up nearly $700 and females $3,033, up almost $500 per head. These increases were also multiplied by about 1,300 more lots sold than last year. The second largest cattle breed in the U.S., Hereford reports 65,000 registrations and 36,903 transfers with 97,581 cows on inventory. The Association has 3,406 active adult members and 2,285 active junior members.

Hereford breeders continue to recognize the advantages of artificial insemination. Since 2003 the number of AI calves registered has increased by 34.1%. Embryo transfer is also gaining popularity, increasing 77% since 2003. Hereford semen demand in the commercial industry is also increasing. According to the National Association of Animal Breeders (NAAB), Hereford semen sales increased 17% over last year, compared to the beef industry total, which increased a mere 2%. Helping with this progress in the commercial industry has been the AHA's Whole Herd Total Performance Records (TPR™) program. Now 10 years old, the program has helped the AHA and Hereford breeders build a database that documents the breed's strengths. More and more Hereford breeders continue to go above status quo and submit ultrasound data, body condition scores, udder scores and cow weights, which all add to the integrity and accuracy of the AHA database.

"Despite a 500-year drought in a large portion of the U.S., we are excited that Hereford registrations and cow numbers have remained steady," says Craig Huffhines, AHA executive vice president. "This is certainly testament to the fact that the demand for Hereford seedstock has doubled the last five years." Also noted at the fiscal year's end are top registrations by state and by breeder. Texas topped the list of registrations per state at 7,997 with Nebraska, Oklahoma, South Dakota and Kansas rounding out the top five. The top five breeders by registration numbers were Rausch Herefords, Hoven, S.D., 838; Upstream Ranch, Taylor, Neb., 659; W4 Ranch, Morgan, Texas, 564; Jamison Herefords, Quinter, 374; and Star Lake Cattle Ranch, Skiatook, Okla., 368.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Hay trade moderate. Demand very strong for dairy, stock cow and grinding alfalfa, moderate to strong for alfalfa pellets and grass hay. Beneficial rain fell over most of Kansas over the weekend. Amounts from a trace to over 7 inches fell in some places with many areas receiving an inch or better. Fall harvest is in full swing across much of the State cutting corn, soybeans and milo. Alfalfa cutting is winding down for the year, a lot of crop residue is being baled to supplement the demand for livestock feed. If you have hay for sale or pasture to rent or need hay or grazing, use the services of the Hay and Pasture Exchange: www.kfb.org/hayandpasture/default.htm

Local Food Connections Workshop November 1

Local food connections can be the most challenging step for food businesses and producers interested in making local food an option for consumers. A Local Food Connections Workshop will be held Tuesday, November 1, 2011 which will help facilitate these relationships and build local food marketing skills. The event will be from 6 - 9 p.m. at the Sedgwick County Extension 4-H Hall in Wichita.

Local producers, grocers, restaurateurs, institutional food buyers, and other food businesses are encouraged to attend and take advantage of the networking opportunities. The workshop will include a local food dinner, a panel discussion, sessions on social media marketing and local food lingo, and a keynote address on Know Your Farmer, Know Your Food.

Cost of the workshop is $10 for members of the Our Local Food program and $20 for nonmembers. Register online at ourlocalfood-southcentral.blogspot.com or contact Natalie Fullerton for details. Registration deadline is October 28, 2011.

For more information, please contact Natalie Fullerton, Our Local Food-South Central Kansas Coordinator at 402-310-0177 or at southcentral.olf@gmail.com.

USDA's Ag Air Quality Task Force meets with Kansas producers, KSU scientists

Air quality has been a hot topic in Kansas for some time, especially due to prescribed burning every spring. The U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Air Quality Task Force convened in Manhattan in September to further explore Kansas air quality issues.

The task force, which is comprised of industry representatives, farmers, ranchers and professors from across the country, meets three times a year at different locations throughout the United States, and is charged with advising the Secretary of Agriculture on major air quality issues.

After a tour of eastern Kansas and two days of meetings hosted at Kansas State University, the task force formed committees to address specific air quality issues, such as particulate matter from prescribed burning and emissions from feed lots. The committees will then identify further research that is necessary to advise the Secretary of Agriculture on policies related to these air quality issues.

Wayne Honeycutt, deputy chief of USDA's Natural Resources Conservation Service for science and technology, emphasized the necessity of this research in an interview with the Agriculture Today radio show. "Everything we do is based on sound science," he said. "There have been times we've held up because we didn't have sound science to back it up."

Without appointing committees, it would not be possible to efficiently address these issues.

"No one person can be an expert on everything," Honeycutt said. "I know that (the Secretary of Agriculture) embraces this task force of experts from across the country putting their heads together and identifying what the major issues are for the country and making those recommendations to him."

Kansas State University distinguished professor of soil microbiology Charles Rice is serving in his sixth year on the task force. With many task force members from states like California, Texas or Arizona, Rice felt it was beneficial for this latest meeting to be held in Kansas.

"I think it's important to bring in task force members to understand Kansas so they have better appreciation of our environmental and agricultural issues," he said. "The agricultural issues they deal with in their states are different from ours."

The task force members visited with Kansas producers about air quality issues and witnessed some of these issues first-hand during their tour on Sept. 20. After visiting the USDA Agricultural Research Service's wind erosion lab and seeing the research of a K-State group on animal feedlot emissions, the group toured feedlots to learn about efforts to protect the environment while still maintaining and running the operation. They also toured the Konza Prairie to see effects of different frequencies of burning and visited with two ranchers about the importance and logistics of prescribed burning in the Flint Hills.

Eric Banks, NRCS state conservationist for Kansas, was involved in arranging the tour. In an interview with Agriculture Today, he emphasized the positive responses he has already seen from Kansas producers in relation to the Flint Hills Smoke Management Plan introduced this past year. Many of these producers, he said, are interested in changing their management practices for the betterment of Kansas.

"Producers are interested in making a living for themselves, but also in addressing the environment," he said. "All Kansas farmers and ranchers want is to be involved in discussions and be a part of decisions made."

Banks said he expects the positive dialogue and responses to continue as the task force proceeds and as farmers and ranchers are involved in decision-making processes.

Passage of FTAs praised by government, industry leaders

By Donna Sullivan, Editor

On October 13 agriculture producers received some long-awaited good news. The House of Representatives and Senate passed trade agreements with South Korea, Colombia and Panama that are expected to increase exports by over $2.3 billion and support nearly 20,000 American jobs. The agreements also include trade adjustment assistance for American workers and makes most American products exported to those three countries duty-free immediately upon implementation.

"The trade agreements will also strengthen what has been a bright spot in the American economy," said Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack in a statement released last Thursday. "With record agricultural exports supporting more than a million jobs here at home, passage of these deals will contribute to a positive U.S. trade balance, create jobs and provide new income opportunities for our nation's agricultural producers, small businesses and rural communities."

"In Kansas alone, the three trade agreements are expected to increase agriculture sales by $129 million per year," said Sen. Jerry Moran in his statement. "When American businesses are given better access to markets, they will succeed, help strengthen our economy and put more people back to work."

National Sorghum Producers chairman Terry Swanson also welcomed the news of the passage of the trade agreements. "The agriculture industry has waited nearly five years for this to happen," he said. "And given the state of our struggling national economy, an agreement that is expected to generate more than $2 billion annually to U.S. farm exports and support nearly 20,000 American jobs just makes sense.

"Passage (of the agreements) by Congress ensures our industry continues to lead the nation in economic growth and international competitiveness," said National Corn Growers Association president Garry Niemeyer. "In addition, this action shows members of Congress understand the importance of the FTAs to rural America."

"Prior to Congress' passage of the FTAs, farmers watched as other nations received access to markets over the United States," Niemeyer continued. "We need to keep and create jobs in America. The FTAs will help us achieve that."

It is now up to President Obama to certify that the Colombian, South Korean and Panamanian governments have approved their own versions of the agreement. At that point he will set an implementation date for the phase-out of trade barriers, taxes and tariffs on American products. That is expected to happen early next year.

First District Rep. Tim

Huelskamp, while praising the trade agreements, expressed the desire to see others now languishing move forward. "Being able

Registration opens for Rural Opportunities Conference

Registration has opened for the Rural Opportunities Conference, sponsored by the Kansas Department of Commerce, to be held Nov. 16-17 in Salina. The conference is an educational event for rural entrepreneurs and telecommunications professionals.

The conference will capitalize on the momentum generated from two legacy programs at the Department — Marketplace and the Broadband Summit. This new, emerging program for rural audiences leverages common goals in support of economic advancement through technology. Entrepreneurs and community representatives will connect with broadband experts to explore advanced economic solutions, plot development strategies and network with industry colleagues.

The conference will feature general and breakout sessions focused on market research; analysis and data usage; advertising and promotions utilizing social media; economic gardening; exporting and industry creation; the role and future of rural telecommunications providers; technology expansion and a review of broadband applications for community anchor institutions.

Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback will speak at the opening luncheon on Nov. 16. Other speakers include Don Macke, director of the Center for Rural Entrepreneurship in Lincoln, Neb., and Ron Wilson with the Huck Boyd National Institute for Rural Development at KSU.

The conference will run 10 a.m.-5 p.m., Nov. 16 and 8 a.m.-3 p.m., Nov. 17, at the Bicentennial Center, 800 The Midway, Salina. The first day of the conference also will feature a reception and open exhibits beginning at 5 p.m.

Registration fee is $60 per person, including access to all sessions, materials, meals and breaks. Registration ends Nov. 9. To register, sign up for exhibitor space or view the complete schedule and list of speakers, go to www.tinyurl.com/66xugr2.

Contact Tricia Kensing-Rice with the Department at (785) 296-0650 or trice@kansasccommerce.com for more information.

to export more beef, wheat, pork and other products duty-free will increase Kansas exports by millions of dollars," he said. "But let's not hang up our hats here. While other trade agreements idle, our competitors are crowding us out of the market, finalizing agreements that make the U.S. a less attractive trading partner. In August I hosted the Ambassador of Vietnam in Kansas. Not only was he impressed with the safety of our products, but also the costs at which we can provide quality products. That is an opportunity. But unless the U.S. also acts quickly to finalize agreements with other nations, countries like Vietnam — with growing populations and growing checkbooks — will make superior arrangements with our competitors."

Livestock meeting to be held in Ottawa

A public meeting "Beef Cattle, Feed, Water and Health" will be held October 26, from 5-9 p.m. at the Franklin County Fairgrounds in Ottawa. An RSVP is required for the meal. The late afternoon meeting will start with a hands-on learning experience on making a water tank from an old implement tire. The entire process will be covered. Tire tanks are generally simple and inexpensive to make; are durable, can be used with waterlines form wells, springs, or ponds; and with an added overflow can be quite freeze proof in the winter.

Following the tire tank demonstration will be a discussion about pond management. This talk will cover everything from determining a location for a new pond to pond clean-out and pond algae and weed control. The EQIP Program, what it can do for you, will also be discussed at this time. There will be time for questions.

A meal prepared by Santa Fe Trail Meats, and courtesy of the Franklin County Conservation District, will be served about 6:30 p.m. Please RSVP for the meal by calling Kerri, at 785-242-1109 ext #31.

After the meal, Extension Specialists from Kansas State University will cover the topics of "Management Practices that Reduce Cow Feeding Costs" and

"Herd Health-Stocker Health Programs for High Risk Calves, Fly and Tick Control, Anaplasmosis, and Trich." Dr. Bob Weabers, KSU Cow/Calf Specialist and Dr. Larry Hollis, KSU Beef Veterinarian, will be the evening speakers.

This year water may be of utmost importance. Many of our ponds are very low now and many have concerns that they will freeze dry this winter. If we must bring the cows home early due to dry ponds, with out doubt it'll mean higher rural water bills. If your ponds are low or dry, now may be the best time to get them cleaned out and install a tire tank or perhaps a concrete waterer below the dam. Research shows livestock prefer to drink from water facilities in the following order: tank or trough, pond, a pool in a stream, and from a flowing point in a stream. A tire tank or concrete waterer provides cooler, cleaner, fresher water and eliminates livestock damage to the pond edges, spillway, and dam. Fencing the pond and the dam will prevent the animals from standing in the water and will lengthen the life of the pond.

The meeting is sponsored by the Franklin County Conservation District and Frontier Extension District. For more information or if you have special needs, please call the Extension Office at 785-229-3520 or the Conservation District Office at 785-242-1109 ext #31.

A mecca for wheat genetics: K-State Center mapping wheat genome

As a top producer of wheat in the United States, Kansas is a leader in many areas of the wheat industry, particularly in innovation and research.

That's where Kansas State University's Wheat Genetic and Genomic Resources Center fits in. In fact, the highly integrated research center in Throckmorton Hall is a world leader in wheat genetic research and development.

The center was created in 1979; the Kansas Board of Regents designated it as a center of excellence in 1984.

"This center was created to discover fundamental knowledge about wheat genetics and also develop genetic resources which can be used to make new wheat varieties," said Bikram Gill, university distinguished professor of plant pathology and the center's founder and project leader.

"Because of this long-term mission, this center was created so that scientists with diverse expertise and affiliation could work in one place on different aspects of wheat genetics research."

Collaboration is paramount for one of the center's most important tasks: mapping the wheat genome. Wheat has one of the largest genomes among crop plants and genome-sequencing methods can't be used. To simplify the process, special genetic stocks provided by the Wheat Genetic and Genomic Resources Center were used to "divide and conquer" the wheat genome into 21 chromosomes, which were assigned to many institutes around the world. Currently, the center has responsibility for four of the 21 wheat chromosomes.

"We are the largest contributor to this effort in the world," said Sunish Sehgal, research associate in plant pathology. Gill is helping to lead these efforts as co-chair of the International Wheat Genome Sequencing Consortium.

The core mission of Kansas State University's center is to maintain an extensive seed and genome bank, which currently has around 14,000 wild wheat species strains and around 100,000 genetic stocks. The collection is special because it is a one-stop shop for wild species, genetic stocks and genomic resources.

"Pretty much anyone who is doing wheat genetic research is getting their genetic stocks from us," Gill said.

While Throckmorton Hall

boasts countless laboratories to conduct research, the center has several other sites. Research is primarily conducted in the greenhouses adjacent to Throckmorton Hall. The center also has a field nursery outside of Manhattan in the Rocky Ford area near Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

Because every country can maintain individual ownership of wheat germplasm — the collection of genetic resources — it can create issues in advancing scientific research. The center's genetic materials and improved germplasm are made freely available for promoting wheat genetics and improved wheat research. Gill has traveled extensively to promote the benefits of germplasm research.

"The strength of the center is that we have the germplasm," Gill said. "At the same time, many Kansas State University and United States Department of Agriculture scientists are working on different aspects of wheat research."

The spirit of international exchange also extends to personnel. Since the center's inception, it has welcomed scientists, professors, students and others from many different countries. After these people have returned to their home countries, a variety of collaborations with the center have resulted.

Current research has a diverse scope. But one project is easy to relate to stomachs worldwide. The center is working on the development of functional food.

"People as consumers are more interested in not only getting calories from food but getting health benefits as well," Gill said.

The center's many efforts and projects have led to its top-notch reputation.

"Our center has been described as a mecca for wheat genetics," Gill said. "We have excellent facilities, some of the best in the country. Many scientists want to come and work here."

State warns of algae danger to hunting dogs

With duck hunting season starting in parts of Kansas, hunters are being warned to protect their dogs from algae blooms.

Tom Langer, director of the state's bureau of environmental health, says hunters should keep their dogs away from water that is green, slimy or has any kind of bad odor.

He says dogs seem particularly vulnerable to the toxins from blue-green algae. The Wichita Eagle reports that four dogs died this summer after contact with infected water at Milford Reservoir.

Langer hopes the problem will have passed when the rest of central Kansas opens to duck hunting Oct. 29 and pheasant and quail seasons open Nov. 12.

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crofts

Last Wednesday's supply and demand report ended up being slightly negative for the corn, bearish for the wheat, and bullish for the soybeans. Corn production was cut to 12.433 billion due to a cut in acreage, but new crop ending stocks ended up being higher at 866 million due to higher beginning stocks and a cut in the export estimate. Export sales have been a little better recently and there is evidence that the big drop in price has attracted demand. Due to large sales to China, next week's export sales number will be over 1.1 MMT for the third week in a row, which is something we haven't seen since last February. Hopefully the better sales numbers continue and USDA will have to plug more exports back into the equation.

I expected to see demand cuts for the wheat since the quarterly stocks report showed more grain on hand than expected, so it wasn't much of a surprise to see ending stocks jump up to 837 million. That is still lower than the past two years, but it reconfirms the idea that we won't have any supply problems despite poor production this year. It is hard for anyone to get excited about the wheat market with demand so poor and with widespread rain in the HRW Belt.

A yield cut and a harvested acreage cut combined to bring soybean production down to 3.060 billion, which was at the low end of trade guesses. Ending stocks came in lower than last month at 160 million, which is friendly since traders were looking for higher ending stocks. As harvest has progressed yields have gotten worse and USDA seems to have factored this into the report. It will be very interesting to see whether or not we get another cut in November, which would make the supply and demand tables very bullish.

The December corn gained 40 cents this week, virtually all of which came before the report on Tuesday limit higher move. Wednesday through Friday were spent, for the most part, consolidating after those gains. The supply and demand report wasn't bearish enough to send the market back lower since there are a lot of concerns about a yield cut in the November report and a lot of doubts about USDA's recent demand cuts and stocks increases when basis levels are so strong around the country. At the same time the larger than expected stocks level kept buying enthusiasm tempered, just in case export sales drop off again and USDA is right.

The charts still suggest that the seasonal low was made at the first of the month, which means that for the time being, breaks are a buying opportunity. Demand will be key to the strength of the market. Fresh export sales that call into question USDA's current export estimate will be very supportive.

The December KW managed to gain 23 cents this week, but also finished 21 cents off the high. There just isn't much to say that is positive about the wheat market right now, other than the fact that it did not fall to a new low for the move this week. If the corn market continues higher, I think that the wheat can move with it, because higher corn prices will increase the amount of wheat used as feed here in the US and around the world. Unfortunately feed usage seems to be the best hope for new demand. Improved export sales just don't seem likely at this time. Much of the HRW Belt is still in a drought, but there has been widespread rain, which will get the crop started, and that is all wheat really needs. Nobody is going to be very concerned about the new crop when old crop stocks are more than plentiful, so even if it stays dry, there might not be anybody that cares until next spring.

The November soybeans gained $1.11¢ last week and settled Friday just below the 38% retracement of the last move down. The market has gone from oversold to overbought in the course of

Kansas legislators get a feel for the show ring

Seventeen Kansas legislators attended the Kansas State Fair on September 10th and got a taste for more than a fried twinkie. The first ever "Legislative Showmanship" contest was held in which legislators were paired with 4-H members from their respective districts to show a beef animal. The event was held to expose Kansas leaders to the livestock show ring and demonstrate how much commitment and talent 4-Hers have to compete at the state level. Haven Johnson, of Busy Bee 4-H Club in Washington, assisted Shar-on Schwartz in showing her Chianina heifer, Remy. The stands were packed as Haven led her heifer for a lap around the arena and then handed the lead to Sharon to start the competition. Gov. Sam Brownback was the judge and trophies were awarded to the grand and reserve champion legislators with money awarded to the 4-H'ers. Unfortunately, Sharon and Haven were not winners of the competition, but Haven agrees it was a great experience for both the 4-H'ers and legislators.

a week, and judging by the spot the market closed on Friday, it would be likely to see a corrective break early this week.

That being said, it seems that the psychology of the soybean market has changed. Many traders went from looking for a yield increase in the supply and demand report to fearing another cut in the November report. Also, the export pace has been much slower than last year, but China has been an active buyer recently and it would only take a couple of weeks of sales over 1 MMT to scare traders into thinking about shortages next summer. Just half a bushel of yield loss and a little bit better demand and the soybean market suddenly goes from boring to extremely bullish.

It was a solid week for the cattle futures. Cash trade was lower, which held back the October contract, but the December live cattle gained $1.35, the February reached $126 on Friday and the April contract made a new high of $128.90. Feeder cattle were similar with the January contract making a new high and gaining $2.80 for the week.

The choice — select spread has been widening out rapidly and reached $18.03 Friday. Typically a wide spread is bullish and this appears to be no exception. Rumor has it that Walmart is buying large quantities of upper 2/3rds choice beef and packers are scrambling to meet demand. Demand is nothing but bullish.

Sell At

Sell Or Buy Cattle By Auction

St. Marys

Tuesdays

STARTING TIME
11:30 AM

We sold 1923 cattle October 11. We had a good run of high quality calves for our Angus influence calf sale, including several consignments of age and source calves with shots. The calves were in very good demand and sold $3.00-5.00 higher. Feeder steers and heifers were steady to $3.00 higher. Cows and bulls sold $1.00-2.00 higher.
