

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary
by Bret Crofts

The stock market reached the highest level since early August, which could be a bullish sign despite our high unemployment and the continual bad news out of Europe. One of the major supporting factors Friday was the idea that there was progress being made on the Greek debt problem, but we have seen good news turn bad over a weekend many times before. The U.S. Dollar Index fell to the lowest level since early September, due in part to strength in the Euro. The new low for the move looks a little ominous on the charts and suggests that we may be headed down to the 74 area in the next few weeks. After seven days of consolidation the December corn broke out to the upside early Friday, but ended up giving back all of the early gains and finished the week only 9/4 cents higher. Despite the poor performance on Friday, the overall pattern in the corn is still up and breaks are for buying. The corn market fundamentals are improving. Export sales have been over 1 MMT for three consecutive weeks and ethanol production has made a major rebound. With just a few more weeks of solid demand it will become very obvious that USDA has underestimated demand for corn. There is also still the concern that USDA will have to cut the yield estimate in the next report. Yields may be better than expected, but it doesn't appear that they are better than the current USDA estimate. It could turn out that the November supply and demand report is very bullish. The December KW pushed through the pre-report highs on Friday, but like the corn ended up with a poor close on the day. For the week the December KW gained 15 1/2 cents, which isn't terrible, but Friday's poor close is a good indication that we will see the very choppy pattern continue in the wheat. There isn't much fresh fundamental news for the wheat. Export sales are adequate, but nothing more. The drought monitor shows the same old story that nobody seems too concerned about. The ending stocks estimate is more than adequate and according to USDA we have nothing to worry about, so nobody is. We are in a situation where the wheat will have to see gains in the corn in order to trade higher. I think we have shifted psychology back to where wheat isn't dragging corn lower any more, but rising corn will result in more wheat being fed, which is supportive. Up a dollar one week, down 50 cents the next. The soybeans have been very active the past several weeks. At Thursday's low the November soybeans had given up about 62% of last week's move higher, so there is a good chance that Thursday's low will hold. Friday's close was pretty poor and a retest of the low is likely, but it should hold, and with just a little bit of positive new the soybeans can continue higher. Like the wheat, export sales are adequate and not much more. So far sales are nothing like the past two years of record large sales and it shows just how dependent the soybean market is on Chinese demand. If sales do improve it would have a dramatic impact on ending stocks, but for now that isn't an issue. Yield is still an issue and it is still likely that USDA cuts the yield estimate in the November report, which is keeping support under the market. Another half bushel to the acre and end users will start hoping that demand doesn't pick up. Cash cattle traded as high as $122.50, which is roughly where the October live cattle are trading. The front months needed to see higher cash trade than that in order to post gains, but the April live cattle contract, as well as the deferred feeder cattle made new highs this week. The cattle on feed report won't do the market any favors with on feed higher than expected at 105% and placements higher than expected at 100%. Matching last year's huge placements figure is pretty amazing and I still don't know where all these cattle are coming from. *Schwieterman Marketing, L.L.C. specializes in risk management and cash grain and livestock marketing plans. # No-till on the Plains offering Holistic Management Course

If there was ever a year that had producers questioning their decision-making skills, it would be 2011.

No-till on the Plains appreciates what producers are going through and we can help! Their Holistic Management Course, being held November 15-17, will enable you to better arrive at those important day-to-day decisions. This intense three-day workshop being held at the beautiful Lied Lodge located on the Arbor Day Farm in Nebraska City, Nebraska will ensure your operation is on the path to success!

For those who attended the overwhelmingly successful January 2011 Agriculture's Innovative Minds (AIM) Symposium in Salina, Kansas featuring Josh Dukart and one of his producers, Gabe Brown of North Dakota, you already realize the value of this event. Josh has developed this workshop to specifically give you the tools to succeed.

Joshua Dukart is a Certified Educator of Holistic Management. He lives out his personal beliefs and manages his professional life under the umbrella of Holistic Decision-Making. His aim is for sustainable balance of people, finances, and land. Joshua Dukart is also a member of the Burleigh County Soil Conservation District team in Bismarck, North Dakota, working with producers on planned grazing, biologically diverse cropping management, and integration of cover crops. In addition, he serves as Field Representative for the North Dakota Grazing Lands Coalition by providing assistance for farm & ranch planning, land monitoring, and coordinating information & education activities throughout the state. He is currently involved in management of Dukart Farms near Hazen, North Dakota, which consists of cow-calf, equine, stocker, and forage crop enterprises. This family ranch focuses on regenerative land management through enhancement of soil health. Joshua has the good fortune of working with some of the most innovative and progressive producers in the United States and Canada. His travels have afforded him the opportunity to observe and learn from some of the best holistic educators and practitioners in the world. With his experiences and continued learning on the land, his consulting business has evolved to work with producers and organizations in assisting them in achieving their optimal triple bottom line. His combination of enthusiasm and deep thinking will challenge your paradigms, yet help you develop confidence in holistic decision-making.

By attending this course attendees will experience benefits such as increased profitability and financial security; increased forage production to sustain higher stocking rates; utilizing the power of nature to benefit your farm operation; forming a management team that is on the same page; achieving the potential of your set of resources; increased health and sustainability of the land for your cropping and livestock; and lower stress.

Included in the registration package is one double-occupancy room at the Lied Lodge on November 15 and 16; breakfasts, lunches, and delicious break fare on Nov. 15, 16, 17; all class materials including a Holistic Management textbook and handbook and three-ring binder loaded with information. All this for $899 for the first full registration and only $449 for additional farm partner(s) or family member(s).

Make no mistake, this will be very in-depth and perhaps even life-changing. It will be full of "A-ha" moments that help you connect the dots and put it all together. Make sure that you act now as space is extremely limited for this event. Be sure to take advantage and involve your spouse, farm partners, and employees to get the most out of this course.

For more information or to register for this Holistic Management Course by November 1, contact the office at (888) 330-5142 or visit the website at www.notill.org.

McCook Farm & Ranch Expo November 16-17

With record crop yields the last two years in Southwest Nebraska, Northwest Kansas, & Northeast Colorado, the McCook Farm & Ranch Expo is the place to be. The Expo will return to the Red Willow County Fairgrounds on Wednesday and Thursday, Nov. 16-17, 2011. The show opens at 9 a.m. both days and closes at 7 p.m. the first day and 4 p.m. the second. Admission and parking are free.

To kick things off, there will be a free producer's breakfast at 7:30 a.m. on Wednesday, November 16th. Join them for some great food and friendly faces.

This event is sponsored by Willow Creek Meats, Archer Petroleum, Hometown Family Radio, Kugler, Pepsi, Nebraska Bull Service, Klein's Motor Electric, Cappel Sales, Eugene Koch Pioneer Seeds, Chief Hotel & Restaurant, Arickaree Ranch Supply, Cowboy Up Tack, Grosch Irrigation & Farmers Magazine.

"It's a great place to come see the newest and latest in farming and ranching practices and technology," said Darren Dale, show manager. "We are expecting 350 vendors from 20 states, Canada & Australia."

Exhibitors include displays for farm and ranch equipment, seed and chemical, agricultural services, irrigation manufacturers, financial providers, commodity organizations, colleges, governmental services, home services, furniture and art galleries and much, much more.

This year the McCook Farm & Ranch Expo will feature a working Ranch Horse Sale on Wednesday the 16th starting at 6:00 p.m. The sale will showcase the best performance horses for sale in the state that will be sold to the highest bidder. This event is sponsored by Z Tags North America. Along with the horse sale many local FFA chapters will be making a project that will be auctioned off with all proceeds going back to that chapter.

Scott Daily Horse Training will be displayed this year at the expo. Scott has been featured on RFD-TV. He will be demonstrating his low stress horse training techniques both days at the expo. Scott has been around horses most of his life. His love for horses and desire to train them began in 4-H while he was growing up in Inola, Okla. Scott started training horses about 15 years ago. After many years of working with challenging colts and horses, Scott has developed and perfected his own techniques. Scott believes in building trust between horse and rider. Scott Daily Horse Training is sponsored by Vap Construction.

There will be park and drive zero turn mower demonstrations in front of the Kiplinger Arena. They will be brought to you by Kurtzer's Walker Mowers.

There is a great line-up of Rodeo Athletes this year, including Professional Bull Fighter Quirt Hunt, World Champion Steer Wrestler Dean Gorsuch, World Champion Bareback ride Will Lowe, along with Miss Rodeo Nebraska. They will be at the expo both days signing autographs along with other rodeo queens from the area. There will be several drawings at the expo including tickets to the Tri-City Storm Hockey and a beer garden to quench your thirst. Corporate sponsors for the expo include Southwest Implementation, Hometown Family Radio and the American Hat Company.

McCook is in the center of rich farmland and cattle feedlots in southwest Nebraska and northwest Kansas. "Our parking lot counts from last year showed vehicles from 37 Nebraska counties, 20 Kansas counties, 13 Colorado counties and 10 other states," says Dale. The Red Willow County fairgrounds are in north central McCook, near West Fifth and O Streets.

Kansas Rural Center 2011 Sustainable Agriculture Conference to highlight opportunities and outlook for food and farming in Kansas

The Kansas Rural Center announces that its 2011 Sustainable Agriculture Conference will focus on food and farm opportunities and the optimism for expanding local and regional food and farming in Kansas. The conference, titled "Options, Opportunities and Optimism: Cultivating Our Food and Farm Future," will take place Saturday, November 19, from 9 to 5 p.m. at Flint Hills Technical College, Emporia.

Speakers, workshops and panels will explore and share ideas and information for building a local and regional food and farm system. Topics that will be covered include:

- Good farming practices and production for all farmers, ranchers and market gardeners

- Food processing and marketing challenges and realities

- Successful production and marketing models

- Opportunities for beginning farmers and transitioning farmers

- Risk management information

- Growing grassroots support for public policy solutions.

Dan Nagengast, owner of Seeds from Italy, Lawrence, and former KRC executive director, will deliver the keynote address on the topic "Feeding the World: Billions of Farmers or Very Few?" Based on his 20 years with KRC, in farming and working in global hunger relief, Dan will present an alternative vision for how the projected 9 billion people walking the planet by mid-century will be fed. His speech will be followed by a roundtable of panelists including government officials, educators, and farmers, who will offer comments from their vantage points on the future Kansas food and agriculture landscape.

Sixteen afternoon workshops will cover practical how-to and informational panels and presentations on vegetable or specialty crop production for direct and retail marketing; mentoring and apprenticeships for farm transitions; cover crops for enhancing livestock production; hoophouse production and possibilities; high and low-tech direct marketing approaches; mobile meat processing unit options; alternative business structures for local and regional food entrepreneurs; grassroots organizing 101; and the 2012 Farm Bill- opportunities for new farm and food coalitions.

Lunch will feature locally sourced foods, prepared by the culinary program at Flint Hills Tech.

The conference will provide information and networking opportunities for crop and livestock farmers, ranchers and graziers, specialty crop producers, farmers market vendors and organizers, students and educators, representatives from non-profits and government, food business owners and restaurateurs, local food and sustainable agriculture advocates, and wildlife and conservation advocates.

Registration cost is $35 and includes food; some scholarships are available. A complete list of workshops and presenters, more information and registration are available at kresustainabilityconference.blogspot.com or at the KRC website at www.kansasaruralcenter.org. Or call the Kansas Rural Center at 785-873-3431. Space is limited to 150 registrants.

The conference is co-sponsored by the Kansas Center for Sustainable Agriculture and Alternative Crops, Kansas Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education Program at KSU, Kansas Farmers Union, and others; and is partially funded by the USDA Risk Management Agency.

NCGA asks farmers, allies to speak out against petition seeking ban on atrazine

This spring, a group seeking to ban the use and production of atrazine submitted a petition to the Environmental Protection Agency. Consistent with its goal of openness and transparency in the regulatory and scientific processes, the EPA posted this petition on its website for public comment. The National Corn Growers Association asks that farmers and their allies take advantage of this opportunity before the window for submission closes on November 14.

"It is imperative that we speak out in support of the current policies regulating atrazine use," said Dean Taylor, chair of NCGA's Production and Stewardship Action Team. "This herbicide has played a vital role in farming for more than five decades, both increasing corn productivity and allowing for the use of practices that protect our environment."

The information submitted by Save the Frogs in this petition does not justify a change in regulations, Taylor said. Current, reputable research indicates no effects by atrazine on amphibians. Following an agency review in 2007, the EPA itself addressed one of the most common charges leveled by critics, stating "that atrazine does not adversely affect amphibian gonadal development based on a review of laboratory and field studies, including studies submitted by the registrant and studies published in the scientific literature." In its 2010 update, the EPA found that no additional testing was warranted to address this issue at this time.

Independent groups conducting research into possible effects of atrazine on amphibians corroborate the EPA's conclusions. As recently as last year, scientists from respected institutions such as the Australian Pesticides and Veterinary Medicines Authority, the World Health Authority and Yale University have issued multitudinous reports confirming that the proper use of atrazine has not been shown to have negative health effects on either humans or amphibians despite decades of extensive research.

Conversely, atrazine has a long-standing record of allowing growers to increase corn productivity by an average of 5.7 bushels per acre while implementing environmentally friendly practices such as no-till farming, which helps reduce soil erosion and protect wildlife habitats. Utilized in more than 60 countries in Asia, Africa, Australia, South America and the Middle East, U.S. farmers use atrazine on more than half of all corn acreage, on two-thirds of sorghum acreage, and up to 90 percent of sugar cane acreage in some states.

Additionally, atrazine fights weed resistance by maximizing the performance of many other herbicides. In doing so, it minimizes the pressure of herbicide selection for resistant weeds. According to a 2003 EPA estimate, farming without atrazine would cost corn growers as much as $28 per acre in alternative herbicide costs and reduced yields. The impact today would be even greater due to the current price of corn.

Report says lightweight cattle on feed an economic force

Cattle industry analysts got a bit of a surprise recently when the September Cattle On Feed report showed the United States inventory of cattle on feed at 105 percent of last year, significantly less than the expected level of 108 percent.

Derrell Peel, Oklahoma State University Cooperative Extension livestock marketing specialist, said widespread expectations that the drought was continuing to force cattle into the feedlot early were borne out dramatically by the sharp increase in placements in Texas, up 15 percent over year-ago levels for the month.

"Placement weights also played a factor, as all of the increase was in the 'under-600 lbs.' category," he said. "In total, placements of cattle weighing less than 600 lbs. increased 44 percent over year-ago levels, led by Texas, which was up 70 percent."

In Nebraska, total placements decreased when compared to year-ago levels, coming in at 93 percent of last year. However, Nebraska placements of cattle weighing less than 600 lbs. increased 63 percent over year-ago levels for the month of September.

"This likely reflects movement of lightweight feeder cattle out of the nation's drought areas," Peel said. "There are indications that numerous cows have been placed in feedlots as well, but it is unclear whether or not the cows are accounted for in the latest cattle-on-feed totals."

The weight distribution

would not suggest all that many cows are included but the Cattle On Feed report questionnaire does not clarify cows versus steers and heifers on feed. As dramatic as the drought-effect numbers were they seemed to be much as anticipated prior to the release of the September report.

"What was not widely anticipated - given that everyone has drought on the brain - was the fact that feeder supplies are extraordinarily tight and how that might lead to significantly lower placements in some other parts of the county," Peel said.

Placements decreased 15 percent in Kansas, 10 percent in Iowa and 7 percent in Nebraska when compared to year-ago levels.

Examine placements weights on a national scale and the story becomes even more dramatic. Though the lightest weight placements increased 44 percent, placements of cattle weighing more than 600 lbs. decreased 13.5 percent.

"Poor feeding prospects also likely contributed to fewer placements, especially given the lack of heavy feeders available," Peel said. "Without the drought, total placements in July would have been substantially lower and would have been well below last year in August. This year's Sept. 1 Cattle-On-Feed report probably would have been about even with last year, without the drought."

Most industry analysts expect placements of lightweight feeder cattle to decrease as most of those animals have now moved out of drought areas or have reached higher weights.

Additionally, imports and placements of lightweight Mexican cattle have decreased sharply after the state of Chihuahua dropped to a lower tuberculosis status in August, which should restrict feeder imports into the United States for the remainder of 2011.

Calves and summer stockers have performed well in areas north of Interstate 70, where forage quality and quantity have been good.

"Those cattle have begun moving into feedlots since the release of the Sept. 1 report and will continue to do so in October, thereby producing a more historically normal placement weight distribution," Peel said.

Lightweight calves from the southeastern United States that usually move into winter grazing in the southern Great Plains states likely will move into other areas of the nation for backgrounding purposes, though some will doubtless move directly into feedlots.

"Though nobody can know for certain what would have happened, it seems likely that some half-a-million cattle or more that were placed in feedlots during July and August would not have been placed if not for the drought," Peel said. "Drought effects may continue but feeder movements from this point on should be consistent with normal seasonal patterns."

Cumulative feedlot placement for the year to date increased 3.5 percent despite the fact that estimated feeder supplies decreased 3.3 percent in January and 2.5 percent in July.

Peel expects feedlots to have an increasingly difficult time maintaining inventories through the end of the year and into next year.

GRASS & GRAIN • BOX 1009 • MANHATTAN, KS 66505

BLACK ink

By Steve Suther

It takes so many plants to make a stand, cows to make a herd and drops to make a rain. Before turning that herd out to pasture, you look for enough plant mass to support their grazing. If you're watching a couple of bred heifers for a month, you might as well be watching 20 or 30.

These examples relate to what I like to call "critical mass," or enough to make a difference. I don't use the term in a precise way, just kind of adapted from two fields. In nuclear physics, that tipping point is the divide between sustaining a chain reaction and fizzling out. In socio-dynamics, it's the threshold number of people in a group that can make something happen by their exchange of ideas.

There's always water vapor in the air, but you don't notice it unless it is either practically devoid and uncomfortably dry, or getting closer to moderately abundant and rain. A few people may not be able to create a movement or a brand, and their efforts could fizzle out. But with just the right dynamics, they can spark an exchange of ideas that leads to something with sustained power.

Back to the farm or ranch, with a given stocking rate and climate, a certain amount of land supports a cowherd large enough to justify facilities, lead you to try new marketing alternative and care about profitability. If you try to do too much with poor planning or management, your enterprise can go "supercritical." Or that could refer to what folks are saying down at the feed store.

Once you arrive at a threshold or realized goal that brings the change you were hoping for, good things should keep happening as long as you can manage the dynamics. The beef industry pursued a quest for critical mass in the area of adding value to underutilized cuts. When meat scientists pulled the teres major muscle out of the chuck and realized how good it was, that alone would not bring about the cascade of added value to end meats that we have today.

It took a producer-funded and sustained effort in locating other cuts worth fabricating from the chuck. That made it profitable for packers to change the way they process beef and pass some of that back to the ranch.

Maybe you picked up on the unusual terminology I used to discuss humidity, a comparison to marbling in beef. Above the Choice/Select border, you find just enough to deliver a pretty good steak, most of the time. As you try beef with lower marbling scores like "practically devoid," you notice something missing: flavor. At that level, beef demand can fizzle out.

When it reaches a critical mass in the mid- to upper Choice grade, the marbling and tenderness that comes with it sustains a consistently great eating experience for millions of consumers.

Quality grade in U.S. beef has been on the rise for the last few years, and studies show demand for it has been increasing, at the expense of Select and lower quality beef. Cattle genetics have improved, getting near that critical point in many herds where a whole new world opens up. It isn't just about adding more land and cows or even pounds of beef. Herd managers have read the market signals and the bull catalogs and chosen bulls that add predictable marbling to their herds, which now produce 80%, 90%, even 100% Choice or better beef. Increasingly, they participate in ownership, data feedback and premiums. And the market wants more, judging by the recent $50-per-hundred-weight spread between Prime and Select beef.

When premium Choice was only 15% of the mix, and Prime 1.5%, they could be ignored. At double that ratio, the quality movement has reached a tipping point and long-term profitability could spread through the beef industry like a cascading chain reaction.

Next time in Black Ink @ Miranda Reiman will look at the link between happiness and great beef. Questions? Call toll-free at 877-241-0717 or e-mail steve@certifiedangusbeef.com.

Corn yield contest harvest forms available online; deadline Dec. 1

With harvest well under way or even complete in many areas, the National Corn Growers Association reminds entrants for the 2011 National Corn Yield Contest to submit harvest forms prior to the Dec. 1 deadline. With online forms available, entrants should remember that submitting these forms in a timely fashion is not only crucial to determining contest winners, but also helps supply NCGA with valuable information on production practices that can be used to benefit corn farmers across the country.

"This harvest, we invite contest applicants to submit as early as possible to give NCGA staff time to thoroughly review each form," said Brandon Hunnicutt, chair of NCGA's Growers Services Action Team. "The contest plays a significant role in recognizing excellence and finding new, more productive techniques. By seeing their entry through and submitting their completed harvest data forms, farmers can show their support for the contest and their fellow growers."

The National Corn Yield Contest is in its 47th year and remains NCGA's most popular program for members. With more than 8,425 entries, the 2011 contest set a participation record again this year. The 2010 contest received a then-record number of entries with 7,125 participants.

The online harvest form is available to both farmers and seed representatives using a similar login process to the initial entry form. Login requires entry of the entrant's NCGA membership number.

When using the online harvest form, it is key that all entrants complete one final step. Following submission of the online harvest form, entrants must submit a printed copy of the harvest confirmation form with the appropriate weight tickets attached for verification. Failure to do so will void the entry. Forms and other required documentation must be sent by mail to NCGA, and postmarked no later than seven days after the final yield check, or by Dec. 1, whichever is earlier. See complete rules for details.

Winners will receive national recognition in publications such as the NCYC Corn Yield Guide, and potentially receive trips or other awards from participating sponsoring seed and crop protection companies. During the 2012 Commodity Classic in Nashville, Tenn., state winners will be presented awards at the NCYC Breakfast and national winners will receive awards at the NCGA Awards Banquet.

Wheat tillering potential may be affected by recent moisture, soil cover

Recent rains were welcomed by wheat farmers across the state, but in some cases the rains caused some concerns. Where the rainfall was too heavy or too intense, seed furrows became filled in with soil and left the seedlings under more soil than normal, said Jim Shroyer, K-State Research and Extension crop production specialist.

"I've had lots of calls about this from western areas. Farmers have seen their wheat seedlings covered up by soil where heavy rains fell and the fields were deeply furrowed by the drills at planting time," Shroyer said. "They want to know if this wheat will still be able to tiller."

The answer depends in part on how much growth remains above the soil surface, Shroyer said.

"Assuming that there are some leaves showing above this layer of new soil in the seed furrows at this time, the plants will still be able to tiller. There may be fewer tillers than normal, however," he said. Most tillers form in the axils of leaves, which will be at the crown level. The crown normally establishes about a half-inch below the soil surface, regardless of how deeply the seed was planted. "When the crown is deeper in the soil than normal, it will be cooler and this can reduce the level of tiller initiation activity going on near the crown," Shroyer explained.

Also, if the seedling has been covered with soil, the tiller will have to push through more than the usual half-inch of soil to emerge, he said. This takes extra effort, but is certainly not impossible. Farmers also want to know if the main shoot and leaves will continue to grow normally where they have been covered with soil. "Yes, if three or more leaves are present above the soil surface. Any shoots and leaves that make it above the soil surface will grow normally. Potential head size will not be affected by this. If only one leaf is sticking out of the ground (or none at all), however, the plants cannot be expected to develop normally," Shroyer said.

The bottom line is that if the stand is good and there are three or more leaves visible above the soil surface, then there's probably no need to replant just because the seed furrows were filled in with soil, the agronomist said. "You can probably expect fewer tillers per plant, depending on how deep the crown has been buried. That may reduce yield potential somewhat - but not enough to justify replanting. If the stand has been thinned out, however, or if the plants are buried so that no leaves or only one leaf is visible, replanting may be a good idea," he said.
