KSU swine unit adds nursery facility — research will benefit Kansas producers

By Donna Sullivan, Editor

With funding from industry donations and Kansas State University's Department of Animal Sciences and Industry, the K-State Swine Teaching and Research Center recently added a new 140x33' nursery building to its facilities. While not increasing the farm inventory, the new building is expected to make better use of existing barn space for teaching and research. It will house newly weaned piglets from weaning to twelve weeks old. Under the old system, nursery pigs were moved to a "grower" barn so the next group of weaned piglets could go into the nursery. It is anticipated the change will provide better teaching capabilities for undergraduate and graduate students, as well as better opportunities for nutritional research for pigs weighing between 50-80 pounds.

The new facility includes 86 pens that can each hold up to five pigs and a connecting hallway to the farrowing barn and nursery rooms. There is a 16x33' feed room for bagged research diet feed and two bulk feed bins for standard nursery feed. A hanging floor scale can weigh entire pens of pigs.

A mechanical ventilation system includes ceiling inlets for incoming air, two natural gas heaters and multiple exhaust fans to remove room moisture and increase air flow for cooling purposes. Easily adjustable feeders in each pen provide a steady flow of fresh feed and each pen includes individual nipple-waterers. Total cost for the facility was $360,000.

"The Kansas Pork Association has been supporting the K-State Swine Team's mission of providing research results to help the state's pig farmers for many years," said Tim Stroda, KPA president-CEO, in the KPA newsletter. "Our farmers recognize the importance of facilities that allow research to be completed in buildings similar to those being used in the industry."

According to Joel DeRouchey, KSU professor and Extension specialist, the research done at the swine unit focuses mainly on feed and ingredient evaluation such as wheat and distiller's grains — ingredients commonly used by Kansas producers. "We also do a lot of feed processing research with the grain science group that has a brand new feed mill," he said. "Looking at particle size, pellet diets, various ways to use a feed mill and then feed it to the pigs to improve efficiency and profitability. We really spend a lot of time on the whole nutrient requirements to formulate those diets correctly so ultimately the pigs perform the best they can for producers."

One type of research that isn't done at the swine farm is PEDv studies, as so far the virus has not affected their herd. They do partner with the vet school and work in conjunction with Iowa State University to study the virus. "But as far as the swine farm, we're doing everything we can to keep PEDv out," DeRouchey said.

It's the ten to twelve graduate and six to eight undergraduate students that conduct their research at the farm each year that DeRouchey believes will have the biggest impact on the swine industry in Kansas.

"With the new unit we have the same equipment that any new, modern commercial-sized facility would have," he said. "So we're able to utilize it for teaching on modern equipment. Ultimately that research helps train those students to go out and help producers in their careers as they are in feed companies or other industry positions. Then that research helps our Kansas producers."

Food bloggers experience agriculture on Kansas Food Farm Tour

By Donna Sullivan, Editor

Seven Kansas City food bloggers had the opportunity to head west and experience Kansas agriculture and food products October 15-17. Kansas Farm Bureau and Kansas Soybean partnered on the Kansas Food Farm Tour, which began at a basil farm in Basehor and went as far west as the McCarty Dairy in Rexford before heading back through Salina to visit the Smoky Hill Winery and Hank Charcuterie, a Lawrence restaurant specializing in charcuterie products made from Kansas-raised animals that are butchered in-house, before boarding the bus to head back to Kansas City. Stops in between included the Good Farm in Olsburg, where they heard about heritage pork production followed by at the Mertz Farm, where they experienced a gourmet meal of locally sourced food prepared by Russ Loub of Little Apple Brewing Company. Mary Mertz also described their family's involvement in agri-tourism, including their Feast of the Field event held each year in June. From there they traveled to McPherson for a visit to the Sawyer Farm. The next morning they traveled to Scott City for lunch and a tour at Nu-Life, followed by watching sorghum being harvested.

Angela Muir, whose blog is called Handmade in the Heartland, was impressed by what she saw at Good Farm, and the care each of their hogs received. She reflected on how the word "feedlot" conjures up negative images in today's popular culture. "The pork farmer said that we would consider these pens or lots, but they're definitely not as scary and horrible as what you might imagine. They're outside in specific areas, but they're not small by any means." She appreciated the way he used the well-being of the animal to gauge its health. "They're growing and they're healthy, so there's a good environment there," she said.

Chelsea Fanders, who writes a blog called Whatcha Makin' Now, was amazed at all the care that goes into growing basil and thoroughly enjoyed her farm visits. "It's so much fun to see great people doing what they're passionate about and giving us a great product," she said.

Russ Loub of Little Apple Brewing Company described the locally sourced meal the bloggers were about to enjoy, which included braised shoulder of lamb from the Mertz farm, salad greens from Southside Gardens in Manhattan and bread from Radina's in Manhattan, which is made from Kansas flour.

The Mertz family welcomed the bloggers to River Creek Farms for lunch as they journeyed across the state making the farm-to-fork connection.

KANSAS FARM BUREAU
The Voice of Agriculture

Vote November 4

By John Schlageck,
Kansas Farm Bureau

As the 2014 election races toward the finish line on Nov. 4, candidates from both parties have stooped to their old tricks of slinging mud, name-calling and finger-pointing at one another. Why can't candidates do what's right for this nation and focus on issues?

Instead we are forced to put up with elected officials who grow the government, do nothing and engage in gridlock.

What Kansas and this nation sorely needs is leadership and a willingness among all elected officials to work together for the good of this country.

What do you think the framers of our constitution and this republic would say about what's going on in all three branches of government today?

What would Washington, Hamilton and Jefferson think about our way of conducting the nation's business?

What would Kansas's own favorite son, Dwight D. Eisenhower, say about the way we're conducting this state and country's business today?

What would Ike, Alf Landon, Andy Schoeppel and other Kansas leaders of yesteryear think?

Profound?

Enlightening?

Telling?

Absolutely.

Where are the ideas for leading this great state and nation?

Isn't that what they're supposed to be doing?

Farmers, ranchers and businessmen cannot, and do not want to engage in the same game of blaming one party for the charade going on in Washington and among some of our own state leaders. This is a shared shame and a weakness that is ruining our state and nation.

In spite of claims to the contrary, taxes continue to increase. The only way for the tax-and-spend cycle to be broken is to hold candidates accountable. The citizenry of Kansas and this country must demand candidates clearly state their positions on the issues.

Today's politicians and the majority of the candidates have become so adept at ducking the issues. They rival a young Muhammad Ali's ability to float like a butterfly, always out of reach and accountability.

Not only do voters rarely have a chance to ask candidates questions, they have even less chance of receiving a worthwhile answer.

Some candidates also talk out of both sides of their mouth. They tell one gathering of voters one thing and others just the opposite.

They also barrage voters with wave after wave of rhetoric, hoping to obscure their real views. They're not called politicians for nothing.

At the end of the day, this year's election is just around the corner. Whether we like what's been happening in government or not, the mess we're in remains our own.

It's our system, and while it may appear broken, we still must vote. Past elections demonstrate rural voters can make a difference by their willingness to go to the polls.

Fiscal responsibility, a reduction in the size of government and increased productivity remain a sound prescription for this country's economic troubles. The bigger problem of cooperation and compromise while working together for the good of this country must be addressed as well if these remedies are to work.

Urge your friends, family and neighbors to cast their votes Nov. 4.

John Schlageck is a leading commentator on agriculture and rural Kansas. Born and raised on a diversified farm in northwestern Kansas, his writing reflects a lifetime of experience, knowledge and passion.

I think I have hit a time warp and been transported back in time. How do I know? Well, the Royals look like one of the best teams in baseball and are playing baseball well into October. That alone should be enough proof, but there is more evidence. Corn and gas are both below $3.00. Maybe all those shows on TVland are not reruns. Excuse me for a minute while I go check to see if I still have my high school diploma.

I don't know if being transported back into the '80s would be all bad either. Think about it. None of us would have our smart phones. We might actually communicate face-to-face. No more firing off an e-mail or even worse, a text. If you want to tell someone something, you would have to either physically travel to where they are or at least pick up a land line telephone and call them. I bet it would cut down on the number of angry outbursts and misunderstanding.

No cell phones would mean less distracted driving and better planning. No more worrying about having reception because there is none. I have often wondered if being in constant contact with everyone is a good thing. No more interruptions during meetings or people answering their phones during a movie. The world would be a much more courteous place.

Going back in time would also not have the internet and I am almost positive that would be a good thing. Sure, I would miss not having all that information at my fingertips. However, it would also be much harder to spread misinformation. Before the internet we didn't seem to have so many "experts" and we worried about our business instead of getting involved in everyone else's. Thanks to the internet we can find any supposed fact or research to promote any idea we can think of, regardless of the truth.

That also harkens back to a time with no social media. How did we communicate or keep up on old friends? Oh yeah, we actually visited them or at least called them on the phone. Okay, so keeping up with old acquaintances via social media is not so bad but there are plenty of other things that aren't so good. It would also be much harder to spread gossip, lies and rumors. Campaigns would require more thought and be much less anonymous. Maybe candidates would run on their stands on issues and not who can smear who with the most dirt, maybe we would actually try to be more informed on the issues as voters too.

Wow, do I sound like Archie Bunker as I sit here in my easy chair and pontificate about how good the old days were? Maybe I have reached the point of being an old codger. I do miss the days of less instant communication, more face-to-face interaction and a lot less connectivity. I am sure the world was not a better place back then; we just thought it was because we didn't know any better.

Much like the genie we can't put it back into the bottle. This is the world we live in and it is only going to get smaller in the future. We must learn how to live in it because disappearing into the wilderness and becoming a hermit really isn't an option for most of us. I am not sure how we promote less reliance on electronics and more interaction with fellow humans. We need to feel more comfortable with community and relationships than anonymity and invisibility.

I have heard that our addiction to technology and specifically our smart phones is akin to substance addiction and I have no doubt (based on personal experience) that is an accurate assessment. I know it will be painful but we need to shut down the electronic devices, look someone in the eye and start an actual conversation. Then we will regain the enjoyment of human, face-to-face interaction.

So pardon me while I turn off my computer, put down my smart phone, and turn off the TV. I will fire up the old AM radio, listen to Denny Matthews and the static call a Royals playoff game and pretend that it is the early 80s again. I just hope I didn't forget to do any homework.

Tuttle Creek WRAPS receives funding increase

Barbara Donovan, Tuttle Creek Water Restoration And Protection Strategy (WRAPS) coordinator, announced that an additional $153,568 has been awarded to Tuttle Creek WRAPS to construct additional stream bank stabilization projects in Marshall and Washington counties. This funding comes from the KDHE Bureau of Water as a mechanism to assist in carrying out Kansas' Nutrient Reduction Framework. KDHE supports the efforts in reducing phosphorous and sedimentation in the Big Blue and Little Blue rivers feeding into the Tuttle Creek reservoir.

Donovan stated: "Our FastTrack stream bank stabilization projects take only a couple of months to construct. Six projects have been completed since May. These additional funds just tripled our cost share monies available to our landowners. This particular funding focuses on the top 30 stream bank projects. I have been working with these identified landowners during this past year in determining their interest level in obtaining 60% of cost share funds from Tuttle Creek WRAPS. The landowner pays 40% of the project cost. Several completed stream bank sites have been featured in the media."

Some of the completed projects will be featured at the Governor's Water Conference in Manhattan on November 12 and 13th at the Sheraton Conference Center. Donovan noted that "Everyone's support and efforts are truly appreciated. This is indeed an exciting time for Tuttle Creek WRAPS and our many partners."

Tuttle Creek WRAPS is the second highest priority area in the state of Kansas. It is also one of the most cost-effectively run WRAPS groups and has received national recognition for its Nine Element Plan which was approved by KDHE and the EPA. Tuttle Creek WRAPS is sponsored by Glacial Hills RC & D (Resource Conservation & Development), a non-profit organization based in Wetmore. For additional information, contact Barbara Donovan at donovanmn@aol.com or 651-247-8292.

No-Till on the Plains Whirlwind Expo November 3 in Marion County

No-till on the Plains, Inc. will host a no-till field day for producers to gain a better understanding of the importance of soil health by utilizing continuous no-till cropping systems and cover crops. Members of the media and the general public are also invited. This event is being sponsored by the Kansas Alliance for Wetlands and Streams, the Marion Reservoir WRAPS project and the Marion County Farm Bureau Association. No-till on the Plains is pleased to offer this high-quality educational event to all interested producers.

The Whirlwind No-till Expo will take place on Monday, November 3, beginning promptly at 8:30 a.m. at the Marion Community Center, 203 N. 3rd St.. The day will begin with a Rainfall Simulator demonstration followed by a tour of local fields utilizing various cover crops. The highlight of the morning features a soil pit where participants can examine soil characteristics in both long-term no-till and conventional till environments.

Lunch will be provided at the Marion Community Center, followed by a full afternoon of knowledgeable speakers. A $20 registration fee is required for attendance. Featured speakers are University of Nebraska-Lincoln Extension engineer Paul Jasa who is a great source of information in the Midwest on no-till planting equipment and system management; Greg Scott, professional soil scientist and soils expert from Tryon, Oklahoma; Star Seed agronomist and cover crop expert Dale Strickler; Continuous no-till producers Ryan Speer from Halstead and Josh Lloyd from Oak Hill will present information about their operations, cropping rotations, including how they use cover crops for soil health and weed control.

No-till farming systems offer several advantages to producers willing to implement the system. Fewer trips across fields without tillage passes will reduce fuel costs. Increasing crops in rotations will break weed and insect pest cycles. Increased crop residue and root systems will increase soil organic matter and microbiological activity, thereby increasing the productivity and fertility of the soil. Implemented in a site-specific systems approach, no-till will, over time, outperform conventional tillage.

Each year No-till on the Plains hosts field days, bus tours and the annual Winter Conference for producers to gain valuable no-till information. "We're striving to meet our mission to be a primary resource for no-till information and a support network for producers," says Ryan Speer, No-till on the Plains president.

For more information on the Whirlwind No-till Expo or to pre-register by October 31, contact No-till on the Plains, Inc. at 785-210-4525 or register online at www.notill.org.

Once combined well, slowly stir in the melted butter. Pour into the prepared baking pan. For the topping, in a large bowl mix the 2 sticks of butter, brown sugar, flour and cinnamon together until well combined and creamy. Drop evenly over the batter by the tablespoonfuls and use a knife to marble/swirl through the cake. Bake at 350 degrees for 35 to 40 minutes or when a toothpick inserted near the center comes out nearly clean. For glaze, in a medium bowl mix the powdered sugar, milk and vanilla together with a whisk. Drizzle evenly over the warm cake. Serve warm or at room temperature.

1/3 cup brown sugar
1 tablespoon liquid smoke
Salt & pepper, to taste
3 tablespoons vinegar
1 can red beans

GRILLED STEAK WITH RED WINE BUTTER

1 shallot, minced
4 tablespoons butter, softened
1 teaspoon chopped fresh rosemary

(4) 6-ounce steaks (flank, sirloin, skirt or filet)

Combine the wine and shallot in a small saucepan and simmer over medium heat until reduced to about 2 tablespoons (it will have a thick, syrupy consistency). Let the red wine syrup cool, then stir into the softened butter with the rosemary and a few cracks of black pepper. Once fully incorporated, spoon the butter onto a large piece of plastic wrap. Fold the wrap over the butter and twist the ends to create a log of red wine butter. Place in the fridge until ready to use. Preheat a grill, stovetop grill pan, or cast-iron skillet. Season the steaks with salt and black pepper to taste and cook until medium-rare (about 8 minutes total for the skirt or flank and 10-12 minutes for the sirloin or filet). Remove the steaks and slice a coin of the butter over the top of each.

Storage tips for fresh fruits and vegetables

Whether you are getting your fresh fruits and veggies from the store, farmers' market or your own garden, it's always a challenge to figure out the best way to store them so they don't turn brown or become limp or wilted. Here are some helpful tips on how to store your fruits and vegetables to maximize their freshness and shelf life.

Fresh vegetables remain fresh longest in a moist environment. They should be stored in the crispers with the control on the "vegetables" setting. If the crispers are full, store vegetables in plastic bags or plastic containers to prevent moisture loss.

Most vegetables should be stored in the refrigerator to preserve freshness. Exceptions include potatoes, sweet potatoes, mature onions, hard-rind squashes, eggplant and rutabagas, which keep well in cool rather than cold storage. Tomatoes should be refrigerated only after they are fully ripe and only for a short time.

Store vegetables and fruits in separate crisper drawers

The crisper drawers trap moisture inside to help keep foods fresh. Moisture controls on some crisper drawers can be used to regulate the moisture level in the crisper. As a general rule, vegetables require high moisture storage and fruits low moisture. Refer to the User's Guide for directions on setting the crisper control. The crispers in a refrigerator will perform better if they are at least two-thirds full.

Wrap certain vegetables and fruits

Storage in the crispers slows the dehydration of fresh vegetables. In addition, leafy vegetables, such as lettuce and spinach, should be placed in plastic bags or airtight containers (Tupperware, Rubbermaid, etc.) to reduce moisture loss. Odorous foods such as peppers and cabbage should always be wrapped to contain odors. Mushrooms should be stored in paper bags rather than plastic. Some fruits do best in vented storage bags.

Remove excess moisture

Vegetables and fruits need a certain amount of moisture to remain fresh as long as possible. However, too much moisture can shorten the storage of vegetables, especially lettuce. Brown spots may develop with excess moisture. It is important that lettuce be well drained before storing. It may be helpful to place a layer of paper towels in the bottom of the bag to absorb any excess moisture; replace the toweling occasionally. Some storage containers feature a special drainage device to raise the lettuce off the bottom and keep it from sitting in accumulated moisture. Berries should never be washed before storing.

Maintain proper refrigerator temperatures

The fresh food compartment of a refrigerator should be kept between 34° and 40°F with an optimum temperature of 37°F. Refrigerator temperatures can be checked by using an appliance thermometer. Lower than recommended refrigerator temperatures could cause vegetables to freeze. Freezing damages cell structure and vegetables can turn brown and become limp.

Consider vegetable and fruit quality

Vegetable and fruit quality affects the length of storage. Quality can vary from item to item, variety to variety, and season to season. For example, a rainy growing season can cause lettuce to be brown when purchased, or become brown more quickly. Sort vegetables and fruits before storage and use bruised or soft vegetables and fruits first. Discard those showing evidence of decay. Wilted vegetables can be used to make broths, and wilted fruits can make sauces.

Follow length-of-storage guidelines

Following the guidelines should help to keep vegetables and fruits fresh and maximize their storage time in the refrigerator. Consult the food storage chart and use items within recommended refrigerator storage time. Vegetables stored longer than recommended will also turn brown and lose their crispness. Fruits can lose their crisp sweet flavor if stored too long or in improper conditions.

There's a book for that

By Lou Ann Thomas
"Are you OK?" my friend Babs Spelnek asked.

"Sure. Why?" I replied.

"Well, you're here ...", she said.

I was meeting Babs for coffee at a local bookstore and my friend had shown up to find me in the self-help section.

"I just happened to wander in here. I wasn't looking for anything in particular," I quickly said, justifying my location.

And that was the truth. But this wasn't new territory for me. I've been lost in the self-help section before. During parts of my life journey that have been bumpier than others, I've read a number of the books on these very shelves.

Here you can find volumes to help you deal with just about everything. There are books covering how to cope with change as well as with being in a rut. There are books on how to develop psychic powers, leadership, inner peace, happiness, intelligence, as well as ones on how to overcome depression, anxiety, guilt, and a wide range of phobias.

Babs and I soon got into the spirit of exploring the human psyche and condition through the titles lining the shelves. I grabbed "The Procrastinator's Handbook."

"Wouldn't it be funny if this one was blank," I said. We both chuckled at the irony, but sadly it wasn't. Instead, it contained a dozen chapters about how to plan and execute a strategy to overcome that nuisance -- procrastination.

"I'll read this one later," I said, not meaning to be funny, but instead feeling uncomfortable holding a book that addressed the very reason I was meeting Babs in the first place -- with a deadline looming, I was putting off work and hated being reminded that the blank computer screen would still be there when I returned home.

"Here's the one you need," Babs said in an excited voice a bit louder than usually heard in bookstores.

I reached for the book that she was gleefully holding out to me -- "Kiss My Tiara -- How to Rule the World as a Smartass Goddess."

"Wow, Babs, you think I'm a goddess?" I proudly asked.

"Well, no, but you're certainly a smartass," she replied.

"It takes one to know one," I said as I headed to the coffee shop, but not before making a mental note to return for "The Procrastinator's Handbook."

After all, we can all use a little help now and then.

THE WAY WEST

By Jim Gray

Out The Car Window

1867 was a transformative year in the state of Kansas. The Union Pacific Railway, Eastern Division was rapidly building the first railroad that would eventually cross the state to Denver, Colorado. Towns sprung up like sunflowers in the disturbed prairie sod. The railroad incursion into the prized hunting lands of plains tribes was the ultimate insult. A renewed resistance led by the Cheyenne brought bloody war to the plains.

As the Indian war of 1867 escalated, men of peace were working behind the scenes to bring the Indian question to a quiet end. The Indian Peace Commission, which had been meeting in St. Louis, Missouri, arrived in Kansas in October. Representatives to the Commission were a combination of military men, politicians and civilians.

Throughout the later part of the summer negotiations were carried out between frontiersmen and plains Indians. Groups of Comanche, Cheyenne, and others met at Jesse Chisholm's trading post at the mouth of the Little Arkansas River (Wichita). Texas cattle and wild bands of Indians intermingled on the new highway that would one day be known as Chisholm's Trail. Throughout the turmoil and the hope for peace, men gathered in railroad camps all along the new line penetrating through central Kansas. Quite naturally many of the camps were run with a certain amount of civic design, although often without an exacting name or known date of origin. Thomas Fitzpatrick worked for a grading crew bossed by his brother William. "Although he allowed a sutler in the camp, my brother would not permit a town to be built nearer than one mile from its edge. Towns always followed the construction camps in those days, with gamblers, loose women, and crooks of all descriptions to fleece the workers of their wages...The towns were ramshackle affairs, mostly walled tents that could be taken down and loaded on wagons as the railroad grade built westward. They lined a wide street, their unpainted sides shimmering in the heat, dull gray from the swirling dust that stirred with the almost never quiet wind and the beating hoofs of drunken riders horses."

Passenger service commenced at Hays City, October 15, 1867. The railroad was steadily advancing westward in spite of Indian attacks upon isolated workers. To the south a great gathering was coming together at Medicine Lodge Creek to negotiate a peace treaty between the United States government and five of the plains tribes, namely, the Arapaho, Comanche, Prairie Apache, Kiowa, and

Cheyenne. George Bent described the scene in his book, Life of George Bent. "The great camp was in a beautiful hollow through which flowed Medicine Lodge Creek, with its lovely wooded banks. This was a favorite place for the summer medicine-making of the Indians and also for their winter camps." Approximately five thousand Indians were in camp. Indian ponies covered the hills and valleys. Around six hundred men represented the United States, supported by

211 vehicles and 1250. Theodore Davis, special artist for the New Harpers Monthly Magazine reported his exploits on the plains, noting the complexity of the problem of gaining a lasting peace with the plains tribes, "There are many old chiefs who prefer peace, but the young men are invariably for war. The chiefs cannot control the 'bucks,' who take the war-path as naturally as the quail does the bushes or the young ducks the sedge." Davis also noted that many old frontiersmen held little confidence in a lasting peace. Nevertheless, the treaties were signed, the Cheyenne being the last to sign on October 21, 1867. True to Theodore Davis' observations, the militant Cheyenne Dog Soldiers saw only sorrow in the white man's treaty. They defiantly rode away without signing. That night as the Arapahos danced a farewell dance a storm crashed upon the camp, setting the prairie afire, followed by a deluge of rain. It was an uneasy ending to an uneasy conference that gave the railroad legitimate access to build the track they intended to build anyway.

Forty-three miles west of Hays City railroad workers approached a draw on the upper reaches of one of the branches of Coyote Creek. Instead of crossing the draw, which would have required a great amount of fill to level the grade, the surveyors plotted a generous curve to the south around the draw. In that draw the end-of-track town of Coyote was established as the Medicine Lodge Treaty was being concluded. The site can be readily identified one mile west of the town of Collyer, by the same generous curve that can be seen out the car window as motorists travel on The Way West.

Soybean research in Kansas highlighted at this year's Southern Soybean Breeders' Tour

For two days in September, Kansas State University's Department of Agronomy and K-State Research and Extension hosted some of the top soybean researchers and agronomists from the southern U.S.

The scientists learned about the challenges and opportunities of soybean production in Kansas and the attendees on the Southern Soybean Breeders' Tour also provided the K-State faculty with insights into what private and public soybean breeders in other areas are doing, said Bill Schapaugh, K-State soybean breeder and one of the tour organizers.

"This was a special event for Kansas," Schapaugh said. "This annual tour has been going on for decades, but it has always been hosted by soybean breeders in one of the southern U.S. states. It had never been held in Kansas. This year, it was our privilege to team up with breeders and agronomists from DuPont Pioneer and Monsanto to develop a program for the tour in Kansas."

Attendees comprised a diverse group – from breeders to production agronomists, entomologists, and educators; from graduate students in their first year of study to breeders with more than 40 years of experience. Most of the participants came from the southern U.S., but several researchers from Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, and Missouri also joined the tour.

"We wanted to give everyone a good perspective on what's happening in Kansas with soybeans, both research activities in plant breeding and genetics and on-farm production. To do this, we arranged for several stops at diverse locations. It was a very intense but enjoyable and informative two days," Schapaugh said.

The group began the tour with a trip to the DuPont Pioneer Soybean Breeding Station near Lawrence, led by Les Kuhlman, DuPont Pioneer soybean breeder.

"At our first stop, we focused on soybean genetic diversity. That's a big issue in soybean breeding. Genetic diversity is what drives the improvement in soybean varieties. We have to develop varieties that are better than what we have now, and genetic diversity is required to accomplish that goal," Schapaugh said.

The group toured a plot where Pioneer breeders are evaluating lines for soybean sudden death syndrome resistance. In the Kansas River Valley and irrigated locations in Kansas, there's quite a bit of SDS this year, Schapaugh said.

"We had multiple presentations on the tour focusing on SDS. This stop at Pioneer's facility focused on the genetic side of the issue," the K-State soybean breeder said. "They had literally thousands of different genotypes in the field. We could see severe SDS symptoms in the field, but not every genotype was affected. Some had no symptoms.

There have always been differences in genetic resistance among soybean varieties, but there is not yet a high enough level of resistance to help protect completely from this disease. Pioneer and other companies are working on this, Schapaugh said.

The group then visited the Monsanto-Edmonds soybean variety plots near Lawrence.

"Robin and Jane Edmonds cooperate with Monsanto in establishing test plots across the region on producers' fields. This gives the company a good perspective on how current varieties perform in different environments in northeast Kansas. It was interesting to get the Edmonds' perspective on the needs and challenges of farming in Kansas," Schapaugh said.

The next stop was at the Kansas River Valley Experiment Field near Rossville where SDS and soybean cyst nematodes were discussed. Chris Little, K-State plant pathologist, discussed his research on environmental factors involved in SDS development. Little is studying the interaction between soil moisture, soil temperature, soil oxygen content, soybean stage of development, and SDS severity.

Another K-State plant pathologist, Tim Todd, spoke about his work on SCN diversity and the implications for soybean management. SDS and SCN are two separate problems, but almost always occur together, Schapaugh said.

Eric Adee, agronomist-in-charge at the River Valley field, talked about his research into seed treatment control of SDS and Fusarium, the organism that causes the disease. Adee has found beneficial results in reducing losses to SDS from a new experimental seed treatment from Bayer CropScience.

The group also visited Monsanto's test plots at the River Valley field. Monsanto's Roger Olson, Molly Drimmel, and Craig Moots discussed the new Roundup Ready Extend lines being tested in Kansas.

The second day, the group visited K-State's research plots near Assaria in Saline County. These plots, on the fields of producer-cooperator Clayton Short, are part of an abiotic stress project funded by the United Soybean Board. Vara Prasad, K-State crop physiologist, and Schapaugh are two of the more than 20 researchers across the country working on this USB project.

"At this site in Saline County, there's always the potential for drought and heat stress every year, so that's the focus of our research here," Schapaugh said.

Tommy Carter, USDA-ARS at North Carolina State University and overall coordinator of the USB project, and Neal Hageman, with USB, discussed the research being done here and around the country on abiotic stress in soybeans. Genetic and genomic strategies to improve soybean response to abiotic stresses were discussed by Grover Shannon and Raymond Mutava, University of Missouri.

Schapaugh spoke about his team's work in spectral reflectance and canopy temperature to more quickly and cheaply identify desirable genotypes in the breeding process in both stressed and non-stressed environments.

"Remote sensing and high-throughput phenotyping are areas of expertise being developed at K-State. This new technology is being tested not only in our soybean breeding program, but also in the wheat and sorghum breeding programs at K-State," Schapaugh said.

The group had lunch at Rannells Ranch, the Department of Agronomy's tallgrass prairie research site near Manhattan. Clenton Owensby, K-State range management scientist, talked about the importance of the prairie ecosystem.

At the Agronomy North

Farm in Manhattan, K-State agronomists talked about cropping systems research and management of soybeans. Kraig Roozeboom, crop production agronomist, and graduate student Bryson Haverkamp explained their research in high-yield soybean management systems. Jeff Whitworth, K-State Research and Extension entomologist, discussed the decies soybean borer and other soybean insect problems in Kansas. Prasad and graduate students Nan An and Kyle Shroyer presented their research into drought and heat stress, utilizing rainout shelters, heat tents, and remote sensing technology at the North Farm.

The tour ended with two stops that delved deeper into the genetic side of breeding. K-State plant pathologists Xu "Kevin"

You have to be tough to trail three horses over 400 miles from Rapid City, South Dakota to Sioux City, Iowa to compete in a world championship relay race and a chance to win two thousand dollars. James “Russ” Madison Jr. thought the prize money was worth the long ride, so he saddled up, and leading two horses,

Wang, post-doctoral researcher; Josh Sharon, research assistant; and Daljit Singh and Jared Crain, graduate students, demonstrated the use of the high-throughput phenotypers they are developing. Harold Trick, professor, talked about K-State research in soybean improvement through genetic transformation. “Probably the most beneficial aspect of this event was the amount of time we had to interact and discuss soybean issues among ourselves.” Schapaugh said. “I found out a lot about what’s going on in the industry. And those in private industry and other universities found out what we are doing at K-State. We talked about ways to improve what we’re doing,” he added. The sponsors were important to the success of this tour, Schapaugh said. Sponsors included Bayer CropScience, Monsanto, DuPont Pioneer, the United Soybean Board, the Kansas Soybean Commission, K-State Research and Extension, and K-State’s Department of Agronomy.

headed to Iowa to compete in the race and try for the grand prize. It was a few years after he was married, in December of 1900 that Madison left for Iowa. The tough cowboy already had a reputation as a top hand on the Circle Bar Ranch outside of Rapid City riding the rough stock and the prize money would help his growing family. It was a thirty-five-mile race and each rider could use three horses to cover the distance. Madison won the race and made the long ride home with his pockets jingling with prize money. Russ Madison was born in Iowa in 1879. His father, “Pap” Madison, had come to South Dakota in 1876 searching for gold and settled in the Black Hills. He moved his family from Iowa in 1886. They came by train to Buffalo Gap and then boarded a stage coach to Rapid City. Russ was seven when he arrived in South Dakota. He went to work when he was 12 years old for Peter Lemley, owner of the Circle Bar Ranch, near the Madisons’ home. The Circle Bar ran 3,000 head of horses that ranged from Custer to Fort Pierre, South Dakota, encompassing a 200-mile area. Young Madison worked with the horses and was soon breaking and training them. He had a lot of horses to work and was becoming a competent bronc buster. He learned his trade well and after three years, he was breaking horses for the U. S. Army. By the time he was 15, he was known as a “Top Hand.” His reputation as a bronc buster grew and at 17, he was entrusted to break 100 head of horses for the UBI Ranch near Rapid City. It appears Madison worked for Peter Lemley for eight years. In December of 1890 the Wounded Knee Massacre took place on the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation. Lemley was a member of the Civilian Militia and made a trip to the massacre site in January soon after the massacre. While there he met the Army scout, William F. Cody, (“Buffalo Bill”), who was putting on Wild West shows. They became friends and Lemley eventually secured a contract to supply stock for one of Buffalo Bill’s Wild West shows in Watertown, South Dakota in 1899. Russ Madison helped trail the horses across the Badlands and then rode broncs in the show. Madison managed to ride “Blue Dog,” a bronc that had never been ridden before. Buffalo Bill was impressed with the youngster and offered him a job touring with the show. The seed was planted and Madison returned home with money in his pockets and the dream of rodeo performances in the West. That same year, he staged a public saddle bronc exhibition in downtown Rapid City. His granddaughter, Mavis Madison, recalled, “A man who was there bet him that he couldn’t hold a silver dollar between his boot and the stirrup without losing it before the end of the ride,” Mavis said. “He took the bet and the horse bucked so hard and wild that it went right through the front window of Haynes Clothing store, and right back out. And, believe it or not, through the whole ride, he never lost that silver dollar.” In the early 1900s he went on tour with Buffalo Bill’s Wild West shows. He also began gathering bucking stock for rodeos. Many of the horses were gathered from the wild horse herd in the South Dakota Badlands. They were said to be the toughest bucking horses in the country. In 1917, he began a 30-year career as a rodeo stock contractor and promoter. He trailed his stock, including broncs, bulls and steers, to rodeos in South Dakota and neighboring states.

Madison produced the first professional rodeos in South Dakota including Deadwood's "Days of '76" which was voted "Best Mid-Size Outdoor Rodeo in the U.S." by the PRCA, the Tri-State Round-Up which later became the Black Hills Round-Up in Belle Fourche and the Range Days Rodeo in Rapid City. He also produced rodeos in Wyoming, Montana, North Dakota and Nebraska. Madison produced rodeos from the late teens into the 1940s. He supplied the livestock and in many instances, he put on the entire show. The Madison name is synonymous with rodeo in South Dakota and he became known as "Mr. Rodeo."

Russ Madison had purchased a homestead in 1907 and grazed his stock there until acquiring another ranch five miles south along Box Elder Creek. He named it the Diamond S and hosted the first rodeos in South Dakota. The Diamond S is still home to Madison family members today. It is listed in the National Historic Registry and in 2003 was listed in the South Dakota Historic Registry. Today it welcomes visitors and provides western hospitality steeped with South Dakota rodeo history.

Russ Madison's Diamond S is still a working ranch. The main ranch house was once a rodeo cowboy guest lodge and was home to rodeo greats of a bygone era. Such greats as Casey Tibbs, Jack Buschbom and Jim Shoulders have called it home. Madison Ranch visitors enjoy the unique experience of being part of rodeo history knowing the ranch was once home to rodeo legends.

Russ Madison's granddaughter, Mavis Madison, recounted an early memory of her grandfather. She was a toddler when he brought the first Brahma bull to South Dakota for his rodeo stock. He took her out to look at the bull. "I remember he got down on one knee and asked me what I thought of the new Brahma bull. I thought it was bizarre-looking but didn't want to tell him that. He was sure proud of that strange-looking animal."

Russ Madison's rodeo broncs were the best many cowboys and fans had ever seen and they lent extra excitement to a Madison rodeo. They were rank and reliable buckers like "Angel Sing," "Battlefield," "Boomerang," "Headlight," "May-be" and "Stormy Weather." There was also "Comanche". He was the best of all and he was unridable.

In 1936, Russ offered a beautiful two-foot-tall silver trophy to any cowboy who could ride him to the whistle. After five years with no winners, Madison figured the horse had earned the trophy and retired him. The silver trophy honors "Comanche" yet today. It is displayed with rodeo memorabilia at the High Plains Western Heritage Center near Spearfish, South Dakota. "Comanche" lived a long life, dying in 1959 at the age of 33.

James "Russ" Madison was inducted into the South Dakota Cowboy and Western Heritage Hall of Fame in 1986 and the Rodeo Historical Society's Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City in 2012 and was further honored as the Director's Choice inductee.

Russ Madison died in 1956 in Rapid City at the age of 77. He was a rodeo legend and every inch a cowboy.

Kennedy and Coe adds equipment dealer expert to Kansas City team

Kennedy and Coe, LLC, a leading U.S. agricultural accounting and consulting firm, welcomes John Moenius as a manager in the firm's Lenexa office. In this role, John taps 30 years of financial acumen—as financial analyst, treasurer, credit manager, and CFO—to address the current issues facing equipment dealerships. With a passion for equipment and horsepower, Moenius balances the financial realities of a low margin-high inventory business to increase equipment dealership performance by optimizing operational structure, financial controls, and asset management.

Moenius understands margin and inventory impacts from working with equipment dealers such as Caterpillar and John Deere, both nationally and internationally. His CFO point of view results in proactively identifying metrics, industry trends, market demands, and key performance indicators that help dealers achieve a better bottom line.

"John's knowledge of the equipment business is a tremendous asset. His familiarity with the industry's cycles and challenges lets him quickly identify financial strategies to improve their profitability," says Marc Johnson, a principal with Kennedy and Coe.

Prior to joining Kennedy and Coe, Moenius was president at Coventry Partners, LLC in Prairie Village, and CEO at Heartland Farm and Lawn in Higginsville, Mo. He received an MBA in finance from Rockhurst University in Kansas City, Mo. and his bachelor's degree in business from the University of Kansas in Lawrence. Moenius teaches corporate finance as an adjunct professor at Rockhurst University and is a retired captain of the United States Air Force.

Hesston Series from Massey Ferguson® Rakes

Massey Ferguson® Hesston Series hay rakes are built to follow the contours. Every rake wheel on our 3900 Series and 5000 Series models, for example, is spring-loaded and mounted on its own pivoting arm so it floats independently. That means all the wheels are on the ground at the same time — not bouncing — allowing them to pick up the hay others leave behind. We even equip most models with front pivoting gauge wheels to keep the rake wheels from gouging in rolling ground. Ask your Massey Ferguson dealer for more details or visit www.masseyferguson.com today.

KSU offers a trifecta of water-planning tools

As fall progresses into winter and harvest comes to a close, crop producers might want to consider planning their future crop rotations, crop mixes and irrigation use. The increasing demand for water in the future gives producers an even greater obligation to efficiently use the resource while optimizing yields.

That obligation is felt by many producers throughout Kansas, according to Danny Rogers, agricultural engineer for K-State Research and Extension. Through being involved in developing Kansas Gov. Sam Brownback's 50-year water vision this past year, he knows water concerns, albeit different concerns, have risen in all parts of the state.

The largest single water user in the Kansas economy is irrigation, Rogers said, which in western Kansas is primarily provided by the High Plains Aquifer System, or in extreme western Kansas, called the Ogallala Aquifer due to the Ogallala Formation that makes up a majority of the geological High Plains Aquifer mass. Research at Kansas State University found that as much as 69 percent of the Ogallala would be depleted in the next 50 years, as water usage is exceeding the recharge.

In eastern Kansas, Rogers said various sedimentation issues are affecting many of the reservoirs that serve both public water supplies and crop irrigation. Some of those reservoirs are direct diversions from rivers administered by the Division of Water Resources, which means irrigators in eastern Kansas at times face unanticipated water limitations.

"Whether you're in western Kansas facing declines, therefore limiting the total volume that you can physically apply during the season, or you're in eastern Kansas where you might have an administrative reduction in your water right allocation by a certain percentage, now is the time to plan how to best optimize the use of that water in the next (crop production) seasons," he said. "We have the tools that can help you do that."

For those irrigators who are challenged with water availability in their irrigation programs, free online and downloadable tools are available on K-State Research and Extension's Mobile Irrigation Lab (<http://www.bae.ksu.edu/mobileirrigationlab/>) to help them make the most of their water resources.

Among the variety of resources on the website, three main user-friendly and practical tools are available for crop producers to make water-planning decisions: the Crop Water Allocator, a tool used to plan optimum crop mixes for the next growing season; the Crop Yield Predictor, a tool used to predict yield, based on the amount of water and timing of irrigation within a specific season; and KanSched, an evapotranspiration, or ET-based scheduling tool used within a season to maintain acceptable levels of irrigation in fields.

Crop Water Allocator (CWA)
Rogers said the CWA

was primarily designed for western Kansas, as it was developed using data from K-State agricultural research centers in Colby, Tribune and Garden City.

Using the tool, irrigators can select from major Kansas crops they plan to plant and set their field conditions—volume of water, anticipated precipitation levels, soil type and acreage. All of the inputs are easy to select and change if needed using drop-down boxes on the new Web-based version. The resource is customizable for each producer.

Jonathan Aguilar, K-State Research and Extension water resource engineer, said making the Web-based CWA within the last year has been a positive change for irrigators and made the tool easier to use.

"When we developed the Web-based version, we also considered those people who are using mobile devices," Aguilar said. "We envision the CWA being used while (producers) are out in the field and are able to share with other farmers what they are planning for the next season. Then maybe they can also get some feedback from the other farmers."

Both the new web-based version and downloadable software version are available on the Mobile Irrigation Lab website, and producers can use whichever version they prefer. The two versions work with the same end goal—achieving optimum returns—in mind.

"You can put in the limitations that your field experiences, and then the CWA will look at different combinations of crops for different water levels," Rogers said. "It is a useful tool to help irrigators establish a crop rotation they might want to consider for the next few years. As we move to more deficit irrigation, crop rotation becomes an important consideration for those producers."

As an example, Rogers said assume fully irrigated corn in a particular area might on average require 16 inches of irrigation, but a producer only has the ability to apply ten inches. That producer can choose to grow corn at ten inches for the entire field, or he or she might want to look at corn on part of the acres with other crops, or even fallow as an option on the other part of the acreage.

The allocator looks at the water availability a producer has in ten-percent increments of the available water. The land allocation can be split into units of land area as small as 25 percent sections of the total cropland base. The producer then selects which crops to be considered and customizes inputs such as yield potential and crop prices for the analysis.

Each crop will be evaluated in the different land segments with each increment of water, and eventually the CWA compiles the best combination of crop and water application depth for the producer to review.

"You can use this whether you're looking at a single-field application or a whole farm application," he said. "That would be your long-term strategy if you started a particular rotation. This is a guide to model what combination you might want to consider."

Inputs in the allocator have default general values, and producers could use these values if they are applicable to their area, Aguilar said. But, producers can customize those, particularly their own yield goals and available irrigation levels, as needed.

Crop water use curves, showing the production increases with increased water use up to the crop's yield potential, are built into the program, and producers would input what they believed to be their upper limit of productivity.

"Because there are differences in location due to soils and other various aspects, you wouldn't want to input a 300-bushel-an-acre corn yield when the best yield you've ever had was 180 for fully irrigated corn," Rogers said. "That would make it an unrealistic projection."

Aguilar said in the past year, many on the K-State water team have hosted trainings to help producers better understand the CWA, its benefit to producers and how to properly use it. He is optimistic that those who attended the trainings will let others know how to use the tool, because they saw its usefulness firsthand.

In-season water planning tools

While the CWA could help producers with next season's crop mixes and planning their long-term rotation strategy, another tool called the Crop Yield Predictor is available for in-season decisions.

"Using this tool, if you decided you wanted to plant a particular crop, and you're projecting you're going to put on a certain amount of water, you could play with what would be the best strategy of timing that irrigation," Rogers said. "It's a seasonal look at water that has a yield component in it, and it will tell you for this particular crop and this level of water what would be the best strategy."

The Mobile Irrigation Lab's baseline irrigation scheduling tool is Kan-

Sched, and it's the tool Rogers said he strongly recommends that every producer, whether they're deficit irrigating or fully irrigating, use for in-season daily decisions on irrigation.

"I often hear producers say, 'I'm deficit irrigating. Once I start irrigating, I don't have any other decisions to make.' That's not true," he said. "It's hard to remember, since we've gone through about four years of drought now, that there are times we have above-normal precipitation in western Kansas, and that there are opportunities to save water."

A recent simulated irrigation schedule analysis (<http://www.ksre.ksu.edu/irrigate/OOW/P14/LammDI14.pdf>) that used a 43-year record of ET information showed many opportunities for water savings for limited-capacity wells within a season as compared to continuous in-season pumping, he said. Scheduling doesn't guarantee a producer will always have enough water, but it does help guarantee the producer won't miss opportunities to save water for future use.

"As we look forward, we see more policy models coming out where we could go to multi-year allocations of water rather than annual allocations of water," Rogers said. "There's benefit to a producer to save an inch or two of water this year that can then be applied in a following year. Because that water can be applied later, you have a much higher productivity value."

Other tools to help with items such as pumping efficiency, and managing fuel and other energy costs, can be found on the Mobile Irrigation Lab at <http://www.bae.ksu.edu/mobileirrigationlab>.

No-Till/Cover Crop Tour to be held near Chapman

Mark your calendars to attend a No-Till/Cover Crop Tour to be held on Wednesday, November 5, 2014, starting at the Tim Sanders Farm in Chapman and finishing up at the Joe Betz Farm. This will be a morning tour that will end up in Enterprise for a hot lunch.

The Dickinson County Conservation District, USDA/NRCS, Pheasants

Forever/Quail Forever, K-State Research and Extension of Dickinson County, Lower Smoky Hill WRAPS, and Dickinson County Environmental Services are all joining together to bring the No-Till/Cover Crop Tour to the area to better serve and educate producers and landowners about exciting and innovative no-till and cover crop practices.

Dale Strickler of Star Seed will be the keynote speaker. Sanders and Betz will be talking about their farm operations, Kris Ethridge, NRCS Area Resource Conservationist, as well as the NRCS Soil Health Team, will be there to speak throughout the tour also.

Highlights of the tour will be benefits of no-till farming, cover crops for soil health and grazing, and soil moisture management. A soil pit demonstration will also be a part of the tour.

Contact the Conservation District at 785-263-2787 or the Extension office at 785-263-2001 by November 3 to make reservations or for more information about the tour.

Abengoa celebrates grand opening of its first commercial-scale next generation biofuels plant Abengoa, the international company that applies innovative technology solutions for sustainability in the energy and environment sectors, announced the official grand opening of its second generation cellulosic ethanol plant in Hugoton, located about 90 miles southwest of Dodge City. The opening was attended by U.S. Secretary of Energy Dr. Ernest Moniz, Kansas governor Sam Brownback, Former U.S. secretary of the interior Ken Salazar, Kansas Sen. Pat Roberts, mayor of Hugoton Jack E. Rowden and CEO of Abengoa Manuel Sánchez Ortega.

Abengoa's new industry-leading biorefinery finished construction in mid-August and began producing cellulosic ethanol at the end of September with the capacity to produce up to 25 million gallons per year. The plant utilizes only "second generation" (2G) biomass feedstocks for ethanol production, meaning non-edible agricultural crop residues (such as stalks and leaves) that do not compete with food or feed grain. The state-of-the-art facility also features an electricity cogeneration component allowing it to operate as a self-sufficient renewable energy producer. By utilizing residual biomass solids from the ethanol conversion process, the plant generates 21 megawatts (MW) of electricity – enough to power itself and provide excess clean renewable power to the local Stevens County community.

The Hugoton plant opening also marks the first-ever commercial deployment of Abengoa's proprietary enzymatic hydrolysis technology, which turns biomass into fermentable sugars that are then converted to ethanol. Among the first wave of commercial-scale ethanol plants in the country, Hugoton builds on recent industry momentum showcasing cellulosic ethanol as a sustainable alternative fuel source.

In addition to the plant's crucial role in proving the commercial viability of cellulosic ethanol, its success provides a platform for the company's future development of other bioproducts that reduce petroleum use, such as bioplastics, biochemicals and drop-in jet fuel.

"The Hugoton plant opening is the result of ten years of technical development, roughly 40,000 hours of pilot and demonstration plant operation, and the support of the DOE," said Manuel Sánchez Ortega, CEO of Abengoa. "This is a proud and pivotal moment for Abengoa and for the larger advanced bioenergy industry – and further demonstrates our long-standing commitment to providing sustainable energy alternatives in the United States. This would have been simply impossible without the establishment of the Renewable Fuel Standard."

Abengoa received a $132.4 million loan guarantee and a $97 million grant through the Department of Energy to support construction of the Hugoton facility.

Industrial Biotechnology Renewed

At full capacity, the Hugoton facility will process 1,000 tons per day of biomass, most of which is harvested within a 50-mile radius each year – providing $17 million per year of extra income for local farmers whose agricultural waste would otherwise have little or no value. Of that biomass, more than 80 percent is expected to consist of irrigated corn stover, with the remainder comprised of wheat straw, milo stubble and switchgrass.

Abengoa plans to offer licenses and contracts to interested parties covering every aspect of this new industry – from process design, to engineering, procurement and construction (EPC), supply of exclusive enzymes, as well as operations and marketing of the completed products from the facility.

The proprietary enzymatic hydrolysis technology utilized commercially at Hugoton is also a focal point in Abengoa's efforts to diversify the range of raw material feedstocks from which biofuels and bioproducts can be produced. For example, for more than a year the company has been operating a demonstration-scale facility that is capitalizing on the same technology and enzyme cocktail used at Hugoton to extract cellulosic sugars from municipal solid waste (trash), thereby allowing expansion of the renewable fuels industry from rural to urban areas.

With a biofuels presence on three continents, Abengoa is an international biotechnology company – one of the largest ethanol producers in the United States and Brazil, and the largest producer in Europe with a total of 867 million gallons of annual installed production capacity distributed among 15 commercial-scale plants in five countries. Abengoa's overall presence in the United States – including its solar, water desalination, biofuels and engineering and construction businesses – has grown exponentially since the company expanded its business more than a decade ago. Some 26 percent of the company's assets are currently in the United States, which is Abengoa's largest market in terms of sales.

Upcoming Extension Risk Management meeting to address livestock concerns

Dickens famously penned, “It was the best of times, it was the worst of times...” If Charles was a cattle producer today I believe he would have the same opinion. Cattlemen are receiving substantial returns for calves of all shapes and sizes. Cattle buyers are wondering how long these lofty prices will last. Central Kansas Extension District is hosting an educational event to talk about just these things. On Wednesday, October 29 in Minneapolis, the “Risk Management and Revenue Protection” workshop with feature experts from Kansas State University, Bennington State Bank, and Kansas Farm Management. Featured talks will focus on risk management strategies for livestock producers, local ag-lender advice, considerations for taxes, and reinvestment options. A delicious meal will be served at 5:15 p.m. and is sponsored by Bennington State Bank. Talks will begin at 5:45 p.m. in the Ottawa County Courthouse basement meeting room. After the presentations, speakers will be on hand for a question and answer session.

Registration only cost

$8, but the information gained could save you thousands as you apply it to your farm and ranch operation. If you or someone you know wants to prepare their ag business for the uncertainty of tomorrow’s cattle markets, call Anthony at 785-392-2147 or email anruiz@ksu.edu to RSVP. This is shaping up to be a phenomenal education event you won’t want to miss!

Growers seeing Green Stem Syndrome in soybeans

By David G. Hallauer, Meadowlark Extension District Agent, Crops & Soils/Horticulture

A number of soybean growers have run into what has been termed Green Stem Syndrome, resulting in green stems as seeds have dried to harvest moisture. It’s likely due to a combination of factors: stress, late rains, even insect damage, maybe? How can that be?

Typically, soybeans accumulate carbohydrates and proteins in the leaves/stems up until seed formation (R5). As seed fill begins, leaves provide photosynthates needed for seed fill to continue – up to a point. As seeds grow, their need for photosynthates becomes greater than the leaves can provide and we see a natural process called ‘cannibalization’, wherein the plants begin to move accumulated carbohydrates and proteins from the leaves and stems into the seeds. It eventually causes leaves to turn yellow and drop, and the stems to turn brown and die.

In turn, if we have decreased seed numbers because of stress or other conditions and those stems/leaves don’t need to be cannibalized, they remain green longer than normal. The beans mature, but the plant doesn’t. Late season rains add to the issue, often delaying death of the leaves/ stems until frost. If

Make time to body condition score cows

The old tractor still runs, but because the fuel gauge is busted, you have to keep checking to make sure it has enough fuel to continue working. And whether you realize it or not, your cows function similarly to that old tractor.

"Body condition scoring is looking into a cow's gas tank to see how much energy reserve she has," said Sandy Johnson, beef cattle specialist for K-State Research and Extension. "We need an idea of where she's at as we manage her condition in relation to the quality of our forages."

A body condition score, or BCS, in cattle is a reflection of how well a cow is, or has been, meeting her nutritional requirements. Producers must provide that adequate nutrition to their cow herd. If a cow is not getting her required nutrients, the producer can't expect her to do her job well, Johnson said.

Producers should score individual cows from 1 to 9, with 1 being thin and 9 being over-conditioned. A score of 5 or 6 at the time of calving is recommended to achieve timely rebreeding.

Johnson said beef producers should regularly determine the average BCS of their herd. Now is a good time in the production season, when cows are either bred for spring calving or have fall calves by side, to score the herd and prepare for management through the remainder of fall and into the winter.

"Intentionally writing down and tracking (body condition) will help you know what's going on in your herd and help you plan for known changes in your cows' nutritional requirements," she said.

Sometimes it's difficult for producers to see body condition changes occurring in the herd, especially if they see the cows every day, she added. Producers should simply take a few moments to score the cows while they're checking them. An easy way is to write down the numbers 1 through 9 and place a tally mark by the corresponding score for each cow. Writing down the scores is important, along with the date, as it helps keep track of any changes over time.

"It doesn't matter if you have a large group of cows and don't score them all," Johnson said. "If you score 20 to 30 percent, you're probably going to have a sense of the herd average body condition score."

How often should you score?

Johnson recommends body condition scoring at several key times in the production year: weaning, 90 days prior to calving, calving and the start of the breeding season. These key times are when the cows' nutritional changes occur. Scoring every month or two during the grazing season also is useful. As an example, 90 days prior to calving is usually when a cow needs more energy to meet the increased demands for her unborn calf, she said. At calving, lactation will require an additional increase in energy. Producers should score their herd at weaning so there is ample time to change cow condition prior to calving, if needed. Scoring at these various points throughout the year can help producers evaluate the effectiveness of their pre-breeding and pre-calving nutrition programs.

"As our summers have gone here, with lots of rain to no rain to somewhere in between, monitoring (body condition) would certainly give you a good sense of what's going on with your grass, what the quality and quantity is as we go later into the grazing season," she said. "This could be helpful so we don't take too much condition off of that cow."

"So that cows can rebreed in a timely fashion, don't take more condition off the cow than you have the time and feed resources to put back on by calving time," she continued. "A cow needs to gain more than 100 pounds during the last trimester to account for fetal growth. If she doesn't, she in effect loses body condition."

What does an optimum condition cow look like?

This time of year a cow will still have a slick hair coat, Johnson said, which makes it an easy time to score her.

"As we look at her top-line, it would appear smooth," she described. "We wouldn't see any of her spinous processes. When she's not loaded up on water or feed, seeing her last two ribs is still acceptable in a BCS 5 cow. She will not have any build-up of fat around her hooks and pins, or no fat around tail head. Essentially, her brisket is going to be tight with no evidence of excess fat. She would have no muscle atrophy, which we would see on a BCS 3 or lower cow that's beginning to use muscle for energy. So, whatever muscle she has, a BCS 5 cow is showing her full amount."

If cows are lower than a target score of 5 at calving, they will generally have a longer than normal postpartum interval, meaning they will take more time to rebreed, and the next calf will be younger and lighter when it is weaned, Johnson said. Managing body condition is one of the things producers can use to maintain or even shorten that postpartum interval.

"As we look at a two-year-old, we might want to have her in a little better body condition," she said. "She's lactating, she's growing and still trying to maintain her body, and so our typical feed resources might come a little shy of what she needs. She's typically going to lose a little condition as she's lactating. That BCS 6 gives us cushion to get her rebred in a timely fashion."

Where can I learn more?

Johnson said there are numerous reliable resources online with images and charts to help producers properly BCS their cows. An example of how to figure BCS herd averages is available in the latest K-State Beef Tips newsletter (<http://www.ksu.edu/about/newsletters/Sept2014BT.pdf>).

Contact your local Extension agent for a variety of resources for body condition scoring and for help in properly scoring your herd. Johnson said you also can practice scoring cows at your local sale barn, where more variety and differences in cows is likely available.

Fall Forage Tour — how to carry more cattle by making the land you have more productive Cattlemen and producers are invited to the Fall Forage Tour, Friday, October 31, 2014 and Saturday, November 1, 2014. The tour will begin at 1:00 p.m. on both days at the Dale Strickler farm, one mile south of Courtland on the west side of the highway. Two audiences will benefit from participation in the Fall Forage Tour – cattle producers and those interested in utilizing cover crops to improve soil health. The tour will focus on improving soil productivity by using of cover crops, forages, and perennial grasses.

According to Strickler, ranchers have two options to increase cattle carrying capacity. They can choose “Horizontal Expansion” by acquiring more land – and more debt – or they can improve existing pastures through “Vertical Expansion.” Vertical Expansion increases the cattle carrying capacity by both expanding the root zone and increasing plant biomass. Strickler advocates expansion of the root zone through the use of selected cover crops and enhanced soil biology.

Soil and plant roots tell the story of how managed grazing, re-growth, and rest affect not only the top growth of grasses but also their roots. To illustrate this, Strickler will dig a soil pit at his farm's Eastern Gamagrass site, permitting attendees to walk down into it and closely examine the roots and the soil beneath the grass. Dale will explain what is happening at the site so that ranchers can see for themselves that increased root depth results in elevated organic matter levels and improved biological activity in the soil. Expanding the root zone by managing the grazing has the potential to increase the land's carrying capacity.

At the cabin site, ranchers will have the opportunity to view many varieties of cool season cover crops. Most varieties are solo seeded to see the effects of soil tolerances. Five different soil types exist at this location: Calcareous, eroded, poorly-drained bottom ground, well-drained bottom ground and saline sodic. Participants will see Eastern Gamagrass, Grazing Alfalfa, Low Alkaloid Reed Canary Grass, Dale's Cover Crop Test Plot, Brown Midrib Forage Sorghum Sudan, Tropic Sun Non-Toxic Sun Hemp, Bird's Foot Trefoil, and many other legume, forage and grass varieties.

Strickler is a former agronomy instructor at Concordia's Cloud County Community College, cover crop and forage specialist for Star Seed and is passionate about soil health. He purchased his irrigated farm in 2000, and slowly has transitioned it to a sub-surface drip irrigated grazing system. Strickler utilizes annual and perennial pastures to grow the forage for his grazing operation. His ranch is an ongoing research classroom, and his annual tours share the various practices he utilizes to make his ranch more productive, reduce costs and improve soil health. Each year many different species of cover crops, legumes and forage possibilities are showcased to better understand how they can be used. Strickler is a leader in helping farmers and ranchers find alternatives to purchased hay and expensive inputs especially during the recent drought, and is on the forefront of helping ranchers think through the endless possibilities to meet the needs of their ranch, livestock and financial situation.

Kansas State won't rehire controversial professor

(AP) – Kansas State University says it will not renew the contract of a professor who conducted controversial research on grassland burning.

Research associate Gene Towne says he believes his 26-year career will end Oct. 31 because he suggested in a published article that ranchers could burn grassland at times other than April. For years, the university has said spring, especially late April, was the best time for grassland burning to revive the prairie.

The Topeka Capital-Journal reports that Biology Division administrator John Blair said Towne's contract was not renewed because of budget issues. Blair also said Towne lacked technical skills and his research project did not meet accepted standards.

For decades, Kansas State has used the Konza Prairie as a laboratory for research into methods of managing fire.

Answering the call: KSU to host 15 farm bill meetings

Farmers are faced with some of the most important decisions of their working lives under the 2014 Farm Bill. To help them make informed decisions, K-State Research and Extension is teaming with several sponsors to bring 15 educational meetings to Kansans in January and February.

"USDA has stated that farmers have at least until March 31 to elect one of the commodity programs," said Art Barnaby, agricultural economist with K-State Research and Extension. "Once a commodity program is elected, that farm serial number is locked in for the next five years, so these are important decisions."

Starting in January 2015, Barnaby and K-State agricultural economist Mykel Taylor will travel the state to provide information on commodity programs and the economic tradeoffs between the options, as well as major changes to crop insurance. Representatives of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Farm Service Agency also will discuss commodity program procedures.

The half-day meetings will cover decision aid tools that were funded by the USDA, as well as a new Excel-based tool developed by Oklahoma State University and K-State, designed to help agricultural producers make decisions as they examine their options.

Besides K-State, major sponsors include Ag Risk Solutions, ARMtech Insurance Services, Farm Credit Associations of Kansas, and ProAg.

Farm Bill meeting dates and locations include:

Jan. 12 – Wichita
Jan. 13 – Pittsburg
Jan. 14 – Emporia
Jan. 15 – Ottawa
Jan. 20 – Salina
Jan. 21 – McPherson
Jan. 22 – Pratt
Jan. 26 – Goodland
Jan. 27 – Scott City
Jan. 28 – Liberal
Jan. 29 – Dodge City
Feb. 10 – Phillipsburg
Feb. 11 – Hays
Feb. 12 – Marysville

Wind energy projects pick up steam in Kansas

(AP) – After a slow start to 2014, several wind energy projects in Kansas are under construction and more are planned once utilities have signed contracts to purchase the power they generate.

The Wichita Eagle reports the state has nearly 3,000 megawatts of wind energy capacity in 25 wind farms, and four wind farms under construction bring an additional 475 megawatts. Six other wind farms under development and approved for construction have a combined capacity for 1,800 more megawatts.

Federal wind energy tax credits expired at the end of last year, but by law developers can still qualify for the credits if their wind farms were started in 2013 and are finished by 2016.

Developers say some of the projects are on hold until utilities agreed to purchase power from them.

Fixer-uppers

By Steve Suther

I got my start with other people's cull cows, just a bid or two above the hamburger market – which was not so dear back then. Decades of using at least breed-average bulls in the pasture and artificial insemination (AI) on the top half moved their progeny up from 10% premium Choice to eight times that. I would not want to start over with any other cows now, but it's still easy to find a bottom 20% in these.

When disposition or inconsistent performance crops up, I still blame the "first cows." Science probably wouldn't assign much culpability back through several generations, but somehow it helps me to see those family trees with questionable roots.

Besides, it has helped improve disposition to cull high-headed granddaughters of certain foundation cows while using bulls in the top 5% for docility and monitoring daughters.

Many, if not most herds have humble beginnings, left behind by decades of keeping replacements from the best bulls. Whether yours are just coming out of that phase or well-improved by now, bull selection still brings up questions of balance and adding value to the next generation of calves.

I've heard people justify some pretty strange choices when they see the bulls with everything bringing $7,500. I guess financial pressure makes people look for justification to back away from the top.

One of the strangest is the idea that I have too much marbling in my herd. It was fine when I brought them up from 50% Choice to 75%, and few would argue that I erred in pushing that a little more to 90% Choice and 40% Premium Choice.

But going beyond that point? That's irresponsible. If we produce more and more great beef, next thing you know, we have too much great beef. Folks won't pay more for it and we'll have a glut of great beef on the market. Besides, you can ignore marbling and maximize pounds while paying less for bulls.

Sounds like an excuse for single-trait exclusion based on a wrong reading of consumer demand. Have you seen the Prime grid premium lately? The boxed beef has been $50/cwt. or more above Choice, and half of that is available on the grid for each animal that qualifies.

Research has shown over and over that we need give up nothing to keep on progressing. But the bulls that will lift these fixer-uppers to that level do cost more, because of what they can do for a herd over the next decades.

When all the bulls you marked go to other bidders, the illogic of single-trait exclusion comes to mind because you can more easily afford bulls with that hole in their EPD profile. All cattle are sky-high, so it can't hurt to back away from quality for a while. Besides, you heard somebody say we might get too much Prime some day.

You can rationalize all you want, but premium brands and Prime beef are the only parts of our smaller overall supply that increased volume and price in the last few years. That's real demand, less subject to a switch to pork or chicken than commodity beef.

Consumers stayed with beef at these prices because it satisfies their craving for a great eating experience, and there are fewer disappointments than ever for those who buy a Prime or leading premium brand steak.

Maybe it's time to think like those loyal beef consumers. Stay on course to produce the best beef, rather than trade down to something that will have to compete on a sensory level with cheaper proteins.

Next time in Black Ink®

Miranda Reiman will look at marketing calves based on what they can do. Questions? Call 330-465-0820 or e-mail steve@certifiedangusbeef.com

America's love for pork continues to burn strong

Results of a consumer tracking study released by the Pork Checkoff found that more American consumers are reporting an enduring love for pork. Key research findings show more U.S. consumers rate their enjoyment of pork higher than in previous studies. Also, consumer-buying habits measured by the U.S. Department of Agriculture also show more consumers are buying pork.

"People are becoming more passionate about their consumption of pork," says Michael Springer, Kansas pork producer. "These studies confirm that consumers are eating more pork in recipes and as a menu item because of its value, flavor and versatility."

Consumers taking part in the Pork Checkoff study were asked to rate pork cuts on a ten-point scale, resulting in a demonstrated increase in the volume of consumers who rank pork as an eight or higher.

The tracking study indicates the size of the Pork Checkoff's consumer target market has grown to 43 percent of U.S. households, up seven points from 36 percent in May 2013, the last time the survey was fielded. In 2010, the consumer target was just 27 percent of U.S. households. Growth in the target size is attributed to people rating pork cuts higher, as well as their confidence in cooking meat.

The study also found that a majority of all fresh pork eaten - 84 percent at home and 80 percent away from home - is consumed by consumers in the Pork Checkoff's target market. The total percent of pork eaten by the consumers grew significantly since the Pork Be Inspired® campaign was introduced in 2011.

"The industry is beginning to see the impact of new marketing campaigns. We're making a distinct difference in the marketplace and in how American consumers view and buy pork," Springer says. "Across the board, consumers are buying more pork from stores and foodservice outlets."

The tracking study results are further reinforced

Lower feed costs, less production lead to record livestock prices

The marketing outlook for cattle is basically a continuation of the last couple years, with more record prices.

University of Missouri Extension agricultural economist Ron Plain told the Oct. 14 MU Agricultural Market Outlook conference that fed cattle prices will set records for the fifth straight year in 2014. And not just by a bit, Plain says.

“Last year, fed cattle averaged about $126 a hundredweight,” he says. “We’ve had prices at $160 and above this year and are probably going to average $153 a hundredweight for the year. That’s an increase of $27 per hundredweight. On a 1,400-pound steer, that’s big money.”

Feeder cattle prices are also setting records. With high prices at slaughter and corn dropping more than $2 per bushel, feeder cattle are more valuable, Plain says.

“The weather has been very good, so the nation has a record corn crop, a record soybean crop and pasture conditions far better than average,” he says. “So that means lower feed cost and makes bottom-line numbers very attractive for the cattle business.”

The size of the calf crop has declined 19 years in a row, which tightens supplies of beef and boosts prices at the grocery store. In August, choice-grade beef averaged above $6 per pound for the first time ever, Plain says.

Lower feed costs have also helped the profitability of hogs. At the peak of corn prices, the break-even price for hogs was around $75 per hundredweight, but Plain sees that break-even price dropping below $50 this winter.

“Feed makes up 60 to 65 percent of the cost of raising hogs,” Plain says. “For 2011, 2012 and 2013, corn averaged above $6 a bushel, and now producers are looking at prices less than $3, which adds to the profitability.”

Pork production is low, in large part due to death losses from the PED virus. Plain says production may increase in 2015 because of fewer deaths and a larger breeding herd driven by lower feed costs.

“Next year we are expecting pork production to be up 3 to 4 percent over this year,” Plain says. “It may not set a record, but it will mean lower hog prices. Growth should mean consumers will see lower prices of pork in the grocery store.”

Presentation slides from the conference are available for download at <http://agebb.missouri.edu/mkt/teleconf/>.

Kansas to spend $10M on rural 77 bridges

(AP) - More than $10 million in state funds will be spent on work on nearly 80 rural bridges listed as deficient, the Kansas Department of Transportation said.

The 77 bridges, rated deficient because they aren’t able to handle legal load limits, are scattered across 75 counties, the Wichita Eagle reported. Some reasons for a rural bridge not being able to withstand legal loads are outdated designs or deterioration, according to the transportation department. Of the nearly 25,000 bridges in the state, less than 10 percent, or 2,390, are considered structurally deficient.

Not all were eligible for state funding. To qualify, a bridge had to have a daily vehicle count of less than 100 and a length between 20 and 50 feet.

“These bridges might have low traffic numbers,” transportation department secretary Mike King said in a statement, “but they are important to the farmers that use them to get their equipment to fields and crops to market.”

State funding is capped at $120,000 per bridge, or at $160,000, if two bridges are being worked on by the county or city. The state provides 90 percent of the funding while the county or city provides the remaining 10 percent, the department said.

In Sedgwick County, the total cost of replacing its bridge near Viola is $400,000. The county will pay for the remaining $280,000.

The bridge has a rating of 47.5 on a federal scoring scale of 100, said Public Works deputy director Jim Weber. He said federal law requires bridges to be inspected every other year.

October is “Co-op Month” – “70 Years – 70 Pounds” challenge is theme October is national “Co-op Month” and Governor Brownback has proclaimed it “Co-op Month” in Kansas as well. Cooperatives across the state and throughout the nation will be celebrating all month long. “Co-op Month” also included “International Credit Union Day” on Oct. 16.

The Kansas Cooperative Council (KCC) and their member cooperatives host numerous events in October, highlighting the values inherent in the cooperative business model. This year, co-ops are demonstrating “concern for their community,” one of the seven core philosophies of the international cooperative movement, by donating to local food banks and charities providing nutritional support to those in need.

The theme for the Kansas cooperative initiative to fight hunger, “70 Years – 70 Pounds,” ties our community support with recognition of the Kansas Cooperative Council’s 70th anniversary. The KCC’s board of directors has challenged each member of the organization to donate at least 70 pounds of shelf-stable food items to a local hunger relief charity in their community. If each of our 265 members meets the 70-pound goal, over 18,000 pounds of food will be given in the name of co-ops to feed hungry people all across Kansas.

For additional information about cooperatives in Kansas and the Kansas Cooperative Council visit www.kansasco-op.coop.

EPA announces final decision to register Enlist Duo herbicide

The EPA is registering the herbicide Enlist Duo with first-time ever restrictions to manage the problem of resistant weeds. The pesticide is for use in controlling weeds in corn and soybeans genetically engineered (GE) to tolerate 2,4-D and glyphosate. The agency’s decision reflects a large body of science and an understanding of the risk of pesticides to human health and the environment.

The herbicides 2,4-D and glyphosate are two of the most widely used herbicides in the world for controlling weeds. Dozens of other countries including Canada, Mexico, Japan and 26 European Union members have approved these pesticides for use on numerous crops and residential lawns. Last year, Canada approved the use of Enlist Duo for the same uses that EPA is authorizing.

EPA scientists used highly conservative and protective assumptions to evaluate human health and ecological risks for the new uses of 2,4-D in Enlist Duo. The assessments confirm that these uses meet the safety standards for pesticide registration and, as approved, will be protective of the public, agricultural workers, and non-target species, including endangered species.

The agency evaluated the risks to all age groups, from infants to the elderly, and took into account exposures through food, water, pesticide drift, and as a result of use around homes. The decision meets the rigorous Food Quality Protection Act standard of “reasonable certainty of no harm” to human health.

The approved formulation contains the choline salt of 2,4-D which is less prone to drift than the other forms of 2,4-D. The Agency has also put in place restrictions to avoid pesticide drift, including a 30-foot in-field “no spray” buffer zone around the application area, no pesticide application when the wind speed is over 15 mph, and only ground applications are permitted. This action provides an additional tool for the agricultural community to manage resistant weeds.

To ensure that weeds will not become resistant to 2,4-D and continue increased herbicide use, EPA is imposing a new, robust set of requirements on the registrant. These requirements include extensive surveying and reporting to EPA, grower education and remediation plans. The registration will expire in six years, allowing EPA to revisit the issue of resistance. In the future, the agency intends to apply this approach to weed resistance management for all existing and new herbicides used on herbicide tolerant crops.

This assessment is the third time in recent years that EPA has evaluated the safety of 2,4-D and the safety finding is consistent with past assessments that EPA has performed for 2,4-D. EPA comprehensively reviewed 2,4-D in 2005, and once more in 2012 and now again in 2014 in response to the current application.

EPA is registering the pesticide in six states: Ill.,

Ind., Iowa, Ohio, S.D., and Wis. The agency is accepting comments until Nov. 14, 2014 on whether to register Enlist Duo in ten more states: Ark., Kan., La., Minn., Mo., Miss., Neb., Okla., Tenn., and N.D.

The EPA’s final regulatory decision document is available in EPA docket EPA-HQ-OPP-2014-0195 at www.regulations.gov

Questions and Answers about this final regulatory decision are available at: www.2.epa.gov/ingredients-used-pesticide-products/registration-enlist-duo.

Schmidt files objection to EPA's proposed rule on 'Waters of the U.S.'

Kansas Attorney General Derek Schmidt announced recently that he has filed a formal objection to proposed new federal water regulations that could significantly extend the regulatory reach of the federal government onto Kansas private property.

Schmidt and ten other state attorneys general and six governors submitted a joint comment letter last week to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) identifying significant problems with the proposed new definition of "Waters of the United States." The EPA, along with the Army Corps of Engineers, proposed a new regulatory definition in April that would result in the intrusive regulation of small waterways, ditches and ponds on Kansas farms, ranches, and land development.

"The sum total of these provisions is that the proposed rule would place virtually every river, creek, stream, along with vast amounts of neighboring lands, under the Agency's Clean Water Act jurisdiction. Many of these features are dry the vast majority of the time and are already in use by farmers, developers or homeowners," the attorneys general and governors wrote. "States by virtue of being closer to communities are in the best position to provide effective, fair, and responsive oversight of water use, and have consistently and conscientiously done so."

The joint comment letter asserts that the proposed rule unlawfully and unconstitutionally seeks to exercise federal jurisdiction over local water and land use management, while making it impossible for farmers, developers and homeowners to know when they may carry on their activities without obtaining an extremely expensive federal permit. "This federal power grab is unnecessary, unwise and contrary to the Clean Water Act.

We don't need a federal regulator on every acre of every field and pasture. The proposed rule needs to be withdrawn," Schmidt said.

The deadline for public comment on the proposed rule is November 14, 2014. A decision on whether to finalize, modify or revoke the proposed rule is not expected until 2015.

Dairy should remain profitable in 2015

Dairy producers are coming off a tremendously profitable 2014, and the outlook for 2015 is promising.

"Feed costs have dropped and should be lower next year," says Joe Horner, University of Missouri Extension agricultural economist. However, Horner says milk prices are expected to drop as well. Dairy production next year will still be profitable, but not as profitable as in 2014.

Horner made his remarks during the fall MU Extension Agricultural Market Outlook Conference.

"Right now our herd size is increasing and milk production per cow is increasing, so we are expecting to grow the milk production in the U.S. in 2015 at above-average rates," he says. That means milk, butter and cheese should cost consumers less in 2015.

Dairy prices at the farm level have dropped by as much as a third in many parts of the world. Horner says the U.S. has not seen that kind of a drop because the economy has picked up and production has been constrained. However, he says, ag economists expect the U.S. to look more like the rest of the world in 2015.

Doug Peterson, son of Charles and Amanda Peterson, drove the reserve grand champion swine at the Shawnee County Fair. Buyers were Stockgrowers State Bank, Blythe Farms, Rezac Livestock Commission, Mary Spencer and Wehner Farms.

Shawnee County Fair's grand champion swine was exhibited by Riley Showalter, Riverside 4-H Club, son of Troy and Mary Beth Showalter. Premier Farm & Home, Queen Farms and Timeless Portraits were the premium buyers.

KPA partners with Hy-Vee to host fall pork promotions

The Kansas Pork Association recently completed four pork promotions in partnership with Hy-Vee at stores in Lawrence, Manhattan and Topeka. These promotions, held September 27 - October 11, marked the celebration of Kansas Pork Month, which is recognized throughout the month of October.

Each store hosted the National Pork Board traveling pork trailer and team that prepared pork sliders to be handed out to grocery shoppers. Industry friends and volunteers joined KPA staff in handing out recipes, Hy-Vee coupons and giveaways. For those with questions about pig farming, volunteers used the model hog barn to share about pork production and give grocery shoppers a look at modern farming practices. As a part of the celebration, Kansas Pork gave one lucky winner at each promotion, a $500 Hy-Vee grocery shopping spree.

“These promotions are a great way for us to engage with grocery shoppers and encourage pork to be top of mind when they are planning meals for their families,” says Jodi Oleen, KPA Director of Consumer Outreach. “Hy-Vee does a great job at understanding their customers’ needs so creating this partnership gave Kansas Pork the opportunity to help enrich that relationship.”

Overall, 800 pork sliders were prepared and served.

American Angus Assn. announces the ten registering Kansas breeders

The ten producers who registered the most Angus beef cattle in the state of Kansas recorded a total of 4318 Angus with the American Angus Association® during fiscal year 2014, which ended Sept. 30, according to Bryce Schumann, Association chief executive officer.

The ten top recorders in Kansas are: Gardiner Angus Ranch Inc, Ashland; Dalebanks Angus Inc, Eureka; Everett L Benoit, Esbon; Beran Bros, Claflin; Flying S Ranch, Saint Francis; Stratford Seedstock, Pratt; Chair Rock Bison Co LC, Greeley; Galen & Lori Fink, Randolph; Harms Plainview Ranch, Lincolnville; Mill Brae Ranch LLC, Maple Hill. Angus breeders from across the nation in 2014 registered 298,369 head of Angus cattle.

“Our year-end statistics continue to demonstrate strong demand for Angus genetics and solidify our long-held position as a leader in the beef cattle industry,” Schumann says. “These results underscore our members’ commitment to providing genetic solutions to the beef cattle industry.”
