Home on the Range cabin restored, rededicated

By Lucas Shivers

A key part of the Kansas narrative and cultural identity, the state song Home on the Range originated from a little cabin near Athol, close to the state line on the West Beaver Creek in 240 acres in Pleasant Township, Smith County.

"I have known the cabin all my life and played around it as a child," said El Dean Holthus, trustee and cabin restoration project coordinator. "The first time I looked at it from an ownership standpoint would have been January 2009 when the three other trustees and I took over active management of the 240 acres of the site."

Working for more than five years to refurbish the cabin, Holthus said the site offers a tangible connection to history and stands as a tribute to the enduring spirit of all Kansans. Hundreds visit the site each year, and many contribute to see the historical treasure stand for years to come.

"The support of everyone is appreciated and continued support is encouraged to keep this historic icon on the Plains for future generations to enjoy," he said.

The restoration project took many local, regional and state fundraisers and grants.

"Our first grant was from the Heritage Trust Fund to fund a feasibility study and architect plans," said Holthus. "The cost was estimated to be $113,000 plus. We have a donor list in the cabin with more than 300 names of individual and corporate donors raising more than $128,000."

The international effort to save the local site culminated in a recent rededication weekend on Oct. 4 and 5, which included many instrumental and vocal musical acts, historical re-enactments, authentic produc-

As part of the Home on the Range Cabin rededication, Buffalo Soldier re-enactors crossed West Beaver Creek entering the show area from the east, singing their cadence song. They performed maneuvers while First Sergeant Barry Tompkins gave a brief history, from horseback, of the Buffalo Soldiers in general and their Nicodemus detachment in particular.

tions, tours, Buffalo Soldiers, and an evening program at the Smith Center high school auditorium.

Sunday morning began with a worship service with bluegrass gospel music. Rotarians from around the world toured the foot bridges built by the organization. To no surprise, the official rededication program concluded with the singing of Home on the Range, as well as retelling the story of its origin.

Roots of the Poem and Song

In the early 1870s, rural surgeon Dr. Brewster M. Higley wrote a poem he entitled My Western Home about the tiny cabin finished on July 4, 1872. Higley tucked it away as 'nothing special' in a book.

A few years later, Trube Reese of Smith Center brought a man with a gunshot wound to Dr. Higley for treatment. While waiting, he opened a book and the poem fell out to be enjoyed afresh. On December 1873, the Smith County Pioneer ran the poem under the title of Oh, Give Me a Home Where the Buffalo Roam.

Dr. Higley presented the poem to fiddler Dan Kelly, the leader of a family band who set it to music. As Americans fell in love with the song, they added verses and the chorus, as well as the eventual title of Home on the Range that wasn't in Higley's original poem.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt once declared "Home on the Range" as his favorite song. Cowboys, riding the long distances to drive cattle, sang the iconic ballad of the American West for generations.

Decades later, Dr. I.E. Nickell, state senator from Smith Center, introduced in the Kansas Legislature a bill to establish the song as the official state song of Kansas. It was adopted on June 30, 1947.

"I am nearly 82 years of age, and this is the first time I have the opportunity to work for something with worldwide popularity," said Holthus. "It is a memorial to Dr. Higley who penned the poem and built the cabin, but I think of equal or greater importance is that it is a memorial to Pete and Ellen Rust, my aunt and uncle, who saved the cabin on its site. My family – sons Mike, Mitch, Lyle, their spouses and children – share the same commitment."

Restoring the Landmark

The tiny cabin on bank of West Beaver Creek where Higley penned that poem has been preserved for visiting by the public, thanks to the Ellen Rust Living Trust.

"According to our contractor, it is more likely than not that this cabin is the only one room, combination log and limestone cabin still on its original site," said Holthus. "Nowhere else can someone sing a song, with worldwide popularity, on the site where it was written."

The cabin is kept unlocked and has a protected exhibit inside. The Rust family made the financial sacrifice to insure the cabin would be restored and maintained and not be moved.

"The trust board, supported by the Kansas State Historical Society, believes the cabin is famous for one thing and should stay on this location," he said.

"We want it to be a dynamic site with many happening every year," said Holthus. "It is the only way it or any other historical site can survive."

Listed on the National Historical Register since 1975, the cabin was a recent finalist for the 8 Wonders of Kansas History.

Thanks to the donations of individuals, companies and other charities, ongoing work at the site is in progress and includes furnishing the cabin with quality replica or restored furniture such as a single pioneer doctor would have had in 1872. Trustees also hope to build walking trails and information stations along the West Beaver Creek.

"Our next step will be to hire a site planner to establish a plan for other permanent buildings like a shelter house, visitors center and museum, 1/3 scale model Pawnee earth house to insure we do not distract from the Cabin, yet enhances and improves the entire site," said Holthus. "The vision is that visitors to the Home on the Range site will be able to experience three eras; the life of the Native American Pawnees, the cowboy era and the era of the 1930s.

Holthus also travels with a mobile replica and display of the cabin across the state.

"It is a 1/3 scale model of the restored cabin built in 2010 and was the first advertising means we used," said Holthus. "My wife Kathy and I have pulled it nearly 5,000 miles in parades and used it in static displays."

It's harvest in fits and starts as rain falls around the state

Recent rains have slowed harvest progress across Kansas. As of the week ending October 19, corn harvested was at 66 percent, behind the 75% average, sorghum was at 25%, behind the 34% average and soybeans harvested were at 31%, well behind the average of 57%. Above, trucks roll into Lippert Grain in Green on Wednesday, October 22 ahead of overnight rains that furthered delayed harvest.

Halloween is this week. I have to admit that Halloween has lost most of its luster at our house. My kids are teenagers so they are not going out and trick-or-treating (or they better not be) and therefore Dad does not have any candy buckets to raid. The only candy I get now is what we buy just in case we have a trick-or-treater (as if I need any candy). That is okay because this year looks like just another day of harvest for Halloween anyway.

Halloween always makes me think of the old Peanuts cartoon where Linus is looking for the perfect pumpkin patch for the Great Pumpkin. He sure would have a dilemma around our neck of the woods, we now have several patches that he would have to drive out to and take a look at. You might say we have a proliferation of pumpkin patches (although you wouldn't say it very fast). I think pumpkin patches and agri-tourism are great but I also think maybe they are missing a golden opportunity.

One morning while driving over to check cows I had a brilliant idea (that doesn't happen very often so you better pay attention). What this country needs is a haunted hayrack ride for farmers and ranchers. We ag producers are a jumpy bunch and scaring us would not be hard to do. Just think back to what makes you jump, cringe or want to hide and we can combine all of those into one spectacularly spooky hayrack ride.

The ride would start off with driving over a hill and seeing that your cows were out in the neighbor's corn field. This not only scares the stuffing out of any cattleman but also incorporates a corn maze without all of the hassle of planning an entrance, exit or cutting trails. Just bale off of the wagon and follow a twisted wreckage of corn stalks.

Next stop would be a combine in a field of soybeans, the bin would be full and the engine would mysteriously die. In the background you would see flashes of lightning and hear claps of thunder. No matter what you do the combine will not restart and rain begins to spray the crowd.

If that is not terrifying enough, the hayrack would move on to a brushy pasture; in the distance you can see a cow. You get closer and closer and realize that something is not right and that is when you notice the problem. There are two, tiny hooves pointing up and to the back. Just as you see the problem, the cow throws her head up in the air and disappears in the brush.

The ride continues and as you travel around a bend in the road you see a perfectly clean field of milo, suddenly everything goes dark and when the light comes back on weeds have covered up every sign of a crop (or the milo could be lying on the ground, you take your pick). The lights go out again and when they come back on you see sheep out in the field happily eating the heads of grain, blissfully unaware of the mayhem ingesting all that grain will cause for their owner.

Just as the ride reaches its farthest point, a place where there is no cell phone reception, the tractor pulling the hayrack starts to make a terrible racket, smoke billows out from the engine and the tractor dies. As you get off of the wagon to look at the tractor a mechanic runs out of the shadows, hands you a bill for more than the tractor is worth, tells you he will be back on Thursday and runs off into the night.

You walk back to the start of the ride, carrying a baby calf you found, through a snow storm with howling winds. As you approach the safety of the homestead you will be rushed by a crowd of salesmen, survey takers, politicians, out of state hunters and neighbor kids selling magazines. Then as you finally break free of that crowd you will notice the flat tire on your pickup. That is when you pass out from fear.

It is a great idea and it will scare the socks off of even the bravest farmer or rancher. Well, it was a great idea until I remembered two things. First, any self-respecting farmer or rancher is too tight to pay for something they get for free each day. Second, no one will ever show up because even if they had decided to come, a real-life disaster probably made it so they couldn't get away.

In praise of hunting

By John Schlageck,
Kansas Farm Bureau

During the early days of our country, settlers hunted out of necessity. While farming and trading provided them with a great deal of food, it wasn't enough for sustenance. In order to survive, they hunted, fished and trapped wildlife where they lived and worked.

Today, hunting in America offers two major benefits to society: wildlife management and an economic boost.

Protecting wildlife makes sense from an environmental standpoint in today's society. This allows for future hunting seasons.

Wildlife management also ensures overcrowding will be less likely.

Today, most wildlife populations continue to thrive under conservation programs put into place in the early 1900s. For example, the white-tailed deer population was a meager half-a-million 100 years ago. With careful conservation efforts, plentiful crops, well planned hunting seasons and reasonable limits for hunters, the population has grown to approximately 32,000,000.

Almost every other wildlife species has flourished as well. Most of these animals number in the millions today. This wasn't the case before the efforts of hunters and wildlife enthusiasts became commonplace.

Just as impressive are the numbers on the economic impact of hunting. With approximately 6 percent of the U.S. population hunting today, business is booming.

For countless small businesses in rural communities in Kansas and across this nation, hunter spending plays a major role in economic success.

Local shops, outfitters, hotels, convenience stores, restaurants and landowners all benefit. In 2011, nearly 13.7 million hunters spent $38.3 billion, according to a 2011 U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service survey. In addition to the 680,000 jobs supported by hunters, hunting generated $11.8 billion in tax revenues for federal, state and local coffers. Wildlife agency positions are also supported by sportsmen through the purchase of hunting licenses and funds collected as excise taxes through the long-running Federal Aid in Wildlife Restoration

These sportsmen contribute on average $8 million per day, much of which goes toward conservation efforts. Billions of dollars have been used to protect the habitats of fish and wildlife throughout the country.

Through conservation efforts, money generated and jobs created, hunting remains a positive engine in this country's economic industry. What many fail to understand about this sacred tradition is that it isn't just about the act itself.

Hunting provides the opportunity to experience nature. Some sportsmen will tell you the best part about hunting isn't shooting; it is the peacefulness and serenity of being outdoors.

Some may even feel a connection with their ancestry while hunting. It's also an opportunity to pass such traditions to their children and friends.

For generations, families have shared these experiences and it has strengthened their relationships. It is a visceral feeling that can strengthen family bonds. Hunting remains a way of sharing in nature's beauty and the dynamic between human and animal have few comparisons in society today.

Hunting prevails as a part of our American identity. Millions of people take pride in hunting. Their experiences are much greater than themselves and create this community called hunting.

John Schlageck is a leading commentator on agriculture and rural Kansas. Born and raised on a diversified farm in northwestern Kansas, his writing reflects a lifetime of experience, knowledge and passion.

Biodegradable wool test complete

The results are in. Back in June, Campaign for Wool global patron Prince Charles, hosted a very special experiment at Clarence House to demonstrate just how quickly wool can biodegrade in soil.

Two sweaters were buried side-by-side in a flowerbed, they looked exactly same but there was one crucial difference. One was a pure merino wool sweater, the other was a synthetic lookalike. As part of our Wool Week celebrations, The Campaign for Wool went back to the burial site to see what had happened to each sweater over the four-month period they spent in the ground.

The sweaters look very different now. The merino wool sweater is on its way to complete decomposition and is being held together by the wire frame. If the sweater had been left in the soil for much longer, it would have likely completely disintegrated. The synthetic sweater, however, is virtually untouched by its time in the ground — it's clean, white and totally intact and has suffered no visible degradation at all.

According to the Campaign for Wool, biodegradability is a key issue for all of us as our throw away society creates more and more landfill. Products made out of synthetic fibers can take 30-40 years to degrade, contributing to the ever-increasing piles of waste. Because it naturally degrades in a fraction of that time, wool is the obvious choice for anyone concerned about the health of our planet.

The American Sheep Industry Association is a funding partner of The Campaign for Wool.

A video showing results of a similar experiment are available at www.youtube.com/watch?v=u2dsG6P0QxE&list=UUt3KQx-RlzpOkLq_hOkTtRg.

Prepare Now for Spending Time and Money During the Holidays

Cindy Williams, Meadowlark Extension District Agent

We've had exceptionally beautiful late summer and early fall weather this year. It may seem too early to think about the holidays, but, actually, now is just the right time. Having some discussions about holiday expectations and laying out plans for how time and money will be spent can avoid stressful, budget-breaking situations during the holidays. This early planning can establish realistic expectations for children, as well as adults, in the family.

Start with a plan. Make a budget for spending money. Start putting events on the calendar now. Decide how much money your family is able to spend this year. Gifts, greeting cards and postage, food and decorations are the four things people typically spend money on around the holidays. Include holiday traditions at home, at work, with friends, and at children's schools as you plan your calendar of events.

This is a good time of year to gather gift ideas. Think back through the year – do you remember having a great gift idea for someone? Now is the time to buy it, maybe even wrap it. Doing this for several items or people on your list will put you ahead, both with time and money. As the holidays get very near, and the weather turns colder, shopping becomes a challenge.

Use cash to stay on budget. Stay within your spending budget by paying with cash. After developing your gift budget, make an envelope for each person on your list and put that amount of cash in the envelope. Use the cash to buy each gift, replacing the money with receipts. Once you've taken all of the cash out, you should be done.

Using credit cards for holiday shopping has advantages in that there's no need to carry cash. There may also be warranty benefits, depending on the item or the credit card you use. The drawback with credit cards is that people sometimes don't stick to their budget and overspend. Research as shown that people often spend 30% more when buying with a credit card compared to spending cold, hard cash.

Is there such a thing as too many toys? It's easy to go overboard and shower children with lots of toys and gifts. Keep in mind that the reality of the research is that most children tend to have three to five favorite toys. Don't be the family that jokes about the children having more fun with the boxes than all the toys they received. A good source for people looking for age-appropriate gifts for children can be found on the National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC) website.

Spending time with those you care about is important, too, and that can be done without spending a lot of money. Include children in as much planning and preparation as possible around the holidays. Children can be part of gift wrapping, baking, or visiting family and friends. Including children in holiday activities will be their best gift in the long run.

Incorporate learning into holiday preparations. Buying a Christmas tree becomes a lesson in decision making and consumer choices when you discuss different prices and options: cut-your-own, buy at the nursery, or use an artificial tree.

Teach basic baking skills, as well as numbers and measurements when you bake cookies together. And there is no better lesson in time management than preparing a holiday meal, and having it ready to put on the table all at once! Children will feel a sense of pride and accomplishment when they are included in holiday preparations.

Share your family traditions for the holidays with children. Many will be fascinated with how these traditions started with past generations and the meaning they have for your family. Emphasize the quality of time spent together over the quantity of objects everyone receives.

I saw recently on social media that there are less than 16 Fridays before Christmas. It's time to get busy!

Three Top Reasons to Make Chia a Healthy Habit

(NAPS) — Here's food for thought: Adding a serving of chia seeds to meals every day offers a more natural way to improve health and well-being than consuming multiple nutritional supplements, vitamins and energy drinks.

Eating nutrient-dense whole foods is a tasty and natural way to boost health from the inside out. Chia, widely considered a "superfood," contains essential fatty acids, fiber, calcium, magnesium, potassium, iron, protein and antioxidants.

Good reasons many make chia a daily health habit include:

1. Appetite control. In addition to delivering a nutritional boost, chia can be used to curb appetite and increase energy. The seeds absorb many times their weight in water, helping to slow digestion and ward off cravings and sugar crashes. The dietary fiber in chia seeds also supports healthy digestion naturally.

2. Healthier hair, skin and nails. Beauty-boosting Omega-3s are "essential" polyunsaturated fats that contribute to improved circulation and cell function. Because the body is unable to produce these fats, the only way to get them is from food. Omega-3s include eicosapentaenoic acid (EPA) and docosahexaenoic acid (DHA), which are found in fish such as tuna, salmon and mackerel, and alpha-linolenic acid (ALA), which comes from plant sources. Chia is a more potent plant source than flaxseeds.

3. Easy to use. Chia seeds are very versatile. You can sprinkle them onto cereal, add them to smoothies and shakes, or cook and bake with them to boost the nutrition of favorite recipes. Unlike flax, chia seeds do not need to be ground. Mixed with water or almond milk, they swell up to create a gelatinous base for all kinds of desserts and beverages.

When choosing chia, it's important to consider the quality of the seeds to ensure nutritional consistency. For example, unlike generic chia seeds, one tablespoon of white Salba Chia whole seeds provides 800 percent more Omega-3s (ALA) than salmon and less than a gram net carbohydrate per serving.

Salba Chia is the only form of chia for which there are positive published health and medical studies. Grown under strict conditions, these white seeds are gluten free, contain no trans fats and are Non-GMO Project Verified.

Jes-so's Reckoning

The history of the "Hell on Wheels" end-of-track towns is filled with excitement and decadence. We have written of Coyote near the present-day town of Collyer. Fifty miles farther west, iron rails reached the new end-of-track town of Monument on June 1, 1868. Coyote's tents and wooden shacks were soon loaded and on their way to Monument City. But Monument's days were to be numbered even less than Coyote. By early July the track approached the 411th mile post which was as far as the railroad could go without appropriating additional money from Congress. A new town named for General Sheridan would claim end-of-track status for what appeared to be an extended period of time.

One eyewitness described Sheridan as "Coyote enlarged." Before the first street was surveyed the engineer was called upon to lay out the cemetery for three adventurous rakes who came to an untimely end within hours of reaching the new camp that was to be named Phil Sheridan. The popular hero of the Shenandoah Valley during the Civil War, "Little Phil," now commanded from Fort Hays. Most references to the town dropped the name of Phil.

Each end-of-track town pushed the terminus of the railroad ever closer to the commercial destinations of Santa Fe and Denver. Freight operations set up warehouses handling merchandise virtually twenty-four hours a day.

Sheridan became infamous for its depravity. The town was so far out on the frontier that law and order was barely perceptible. Citizens resorted to vigilante justice to keep from falling into the lower regions of Hell. One writer noted, "Morals in this mushroom town were among the articles of commerce. No one tried to possess any, unless money was to be made by it."

The engineer laid out Sheridan's cemetery on a ridge overlooking the town. By the end of winter, nine months after founding the town, 26 men gained permanent residency on that sandy ridge. An argument was often commenced with the statement, "I'll give you a high lot!"

In this highly charged atmosphere a strange little man carved out a reputation that made even the most dangerous of men shiver. Jes-so, as he was called, carried a hump on the back of a "shrunken little figure." His left hand was noticeably crippled. The enigmatic face was hard, showing a touch of humor over a bitter expression that held "a suggestion of malice." In conversation he habitually offered his universal affirmation for all that was with "Jes-so..." as if to say "so be it," no matter the outcome of the particular subject at hand.

Jes-so came to Sheridan as a wagonmaster for a Mexican freighting outfit. With Jes-so was a young woman that the tough little man cared for as though she were his daughter. The word among the denizens of Sheridan was that Jes-so had found her as an outcast in some forsaken New Mexican outpost. He had raised her from a child, in fact, his crippled left hand was an unrelenting reminder of a fateful day many years before when he sacrificed that hand in an effort to hold back an oncoming wagon wheel. The great wheel of the freight wagon would have surely crushed her had he not gallantly pulled her to safety.

Jes-so spoiled his "adopted" daughter beyond measure, but jealously watched over her in the profane atmosphere of Sheridan. With the "beauty of Mexico's maidens" Jes-so's daughter drew the attention of every man she met. Jes-so soon discovered that keeping a blossoming young woman in line in a town that never slept was an overwhelming task.

After only a week in the end-of-track town Jes-so had treated himself to two fistfights in defense of her honor. Within another week she disappeared; gone away with "Lightfingered Bonny."

Jes-so was inconsolable. "He crept around town like a wild-cat whetting its claws on the gravelly soil and preparing to spring." When asked if he would pursue them his eyes ragged with an infernal torment as he gasped a wicked, merciless "Jes-so." Two weeks after Jes-so left a wagonmaster arrived in town with a blood-curdling story.

At the crossing of the Purgatory River in southeast Colorado his men discovered a young couple sitting at a table made from an old feed box. "Their heads had fallen close together, and the hands, which lay upon each other covered a Catholic prayer book." The shocking tale of the macabre marriage ceremony could only be explained as Jes-so's reckoning for love's transgression on The Way West.

Web tool can help farmers make farm bill decisions

When farmers choose one of the 2014 farm bill's safety-net programs this winter, they are locked in for the next four years. A new online tool can help them evaluate which program is best for them.

The Food and Agricultural Policy Research Institute at the University of Missouri (MU FAPRI), in partnership with the Agricultural and Food Policy Center at Texas A&M University, built the tool for the USDA Farm Service Agency.

FAPRI program director Peter Zimmer says the tool allows farmers to enter specific information about their operation to help them make complex decisions.

"Based on the information they enter, it shows them what type of payments are possible in the future," Zimmer says. "They can step through all these decisions and see if they want to reallocate their base acres, if they want to update their yields and what program they want to sign up for."

Farmers can choose either Agricultural Risk Coverage (ARC) or Price Loss Coverage (PLC). Whichever one is selected will be in place for the life of the farm bill.

Under PLC, producers receive payments if a covered commodity's national average price for the marketing year drops below a reference price, while ARC is based on both yield and prices, Zimmer said.

The tool can be accessed at fapri.missouri.edu or usda.afpc.tamu.edu.

Zimmer urges producers to use the tool before choosing a farm bill program.

"The decisions the producers face are very complex," Zimmer says. "But there are real dollars involved, so they really need to take the time to enter their data and look at what these different decisions mean to their bottom line."

For more information about the ARC and PLC programs, go to 1.usa.gov/1oNJEZL.

Winners of Conservation Speech Contest announced

The Pottawatomie County Conservation District held its local Conservation Speech Contest on October 9, 2014 in Westmoreland. The contest is held every year and opens to all county high school students in the county at learning levels of ninth through twelfth grade. This year, Kyle Rifel, a junior from Rock Creek High School, was declared the winner. The theme for the contest was “We are the Future for Water in Kansas” and Kyle was informative on water conservation statistics in his talk. Students are judged on content, organization, voice, stage presence, power of expression, time, and general effectiveness. Seven judges were present. Kyle is also a member of FFA and 4-H and plans to give his speech at competitions through those organizations.

Kyle was presented a certificate and a prize of $100 for his efforts. As the honor of the local contest winner he will next compete in the Kansas Association of Conservation Districts (KACD) Area IV contest held in Holton, coming up on November 5. Kyle will compete against students from 22 other counties. He will have an opportunity to win another cash prize as well as a chance to compete in the state KACD speech competition held on November 24 in Wichita where scholarships are awarded. Kyle has also been asked to give his speech again at the Annual Meeting of the District in early 2015. Alexis Engelken, a senior at Rock Creek High School, placed second in the evening’s competition. Alexis has received $25 and a certificate.

2014 farm bill's APH yield exclusion to be implemented for 2015 spring crops

Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack recently announced the implementation of a new Farm Bill initiative that will provide relief to farmers affected by severe weather, including drought. The Actual Production History (APH) Yield Exclusion, available nationwide for farmers of select crops starting next spring, allows eligible producers who have been hit with severe weather to receive a higher approved yield on their insurance policies through the federal crop insurance program.

Spring crops eligible for APH Yield Exclusion include corn, soybeans, wheat, cotton, grain sorghum, rice, barley, canola, sunflowers, peanuts, and popcorn. Nearly three-fourths of all acres and liability in the federal crop insurance program will be covered under APH Yield Exclusion.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture's (USDA) Risk Management Agency and Farm Service Agency staff worked hard to implement several 2014 Farm Bill programs ahead of schedule, such as the Agricultural Risk Coverage, the Price Loss Coverage, Supplemental Coverage Option and Stacked Income Protection Plan. USDA is now able to leverage data from the Agricultural Risk Coverage and Price Loss Coverage to extract the information needed to implement APH Yield Exclusion earlier than expected.

"Key programs launched or extended as part of the 2014 Farm Bill are essential to USDA's commitment to help rural communities grow. These efforts give farmers, ranchers and their families better security as they work to ensure Americans have safe and affordable food," said Vilsack. "By getting other 2014 Farm Bill programs implemented efficiently, we are now able to offer yield exclusion for Spring 2015 crops, providing relief to farmers impacted by severe weather."

The APH Yield Exclusion allows farmers to exclude yields in exceptionally bad years (such as a year in which a natural disaster or other extreme weather occurs) from their production history when calculating yields used to establish their crop insurance coverage. The level of insurance coverage available to a farmer is based on the farmer's average recent yields. In the past, a year of particularly low yields that occurred due to severe weather beyond the farmer's control would reduce the level of insurance coverage available to the farmer in future years. By excluding unusually bad years, farmers will not have to worry that a natural disaster will reduce their insurance coverage for years to come.

Under the new Farm Bill program, yields can be excluded from farm actual production history when the county average yield for that crop year is at least 50 percent below the ten previous consecutive crop years' average yield.

RMA will provide additional program details in December 2014.

House ag committee chairman Frank Lucas issued the following statement welcoming the news.

"I commend Secretary Vilsack and his team on their efforts to implement this critical provision in the farm bill. The APH adjustment means everything to farmers all across the country who have suffered through year after year of devastating drought conditions. It is the difference between having viable crop insurance for the coming year or not. It is for these reasons that I worked to include the APH adjustment in the farm bill and why I am pleased the Secretary redoubled his efforts to get it done this year. I remain hopeful that USDA will also work to make the same relief available to winter wheat producers."

National Association of Wheat Growers president Paul Penner, Hillsboro, also applauded the action.

"On behalf of NAWG and the 22 states we represent, I thank Secretary Vilsack for working with his team to implement the APH provision for 2015 spring crops," he said. "This provision will be another tool for wheat growers across the country to strengthen their safety net, particularly for growers who have experienced multi-year disasters. We are hopeful that USDA will continue to work on implementing this provision for our winter wheat growers this year."

Wake Up the Wakarusa: Conservation District to host kick-off meeting for new program

The Douglas County Conservation District is announcing a new local cost-share program aimed specifically at areas of Douglas County that contribute drainage to the Clinton Reservoir. The intent of the voluntary compliance program is to reduce the amount of sediment reaching Clinton Lake, by providing a limited amount of county funding through a Local Cost-Share Assistance Program.

The program has identified a list of twenty-two conservation practices that are designed to reduce soil erosion. These practices will be eligible for up to 70% reimbursement of the cost of the project up to $5,000 in cost-share assistance.

Applications will be accepted beginning with the November 5th program kick-off meeting and continuing through December 1, 2014. The applications will be ranked according to the amount of soil saved by installation of the project. Participating landowners will be required to maintain the practice for a period of ten years and all practices must meet the standards and specifications that have been developed by the USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS).

The Program Kick-Off Meeting will be held on November 5th, 2014, at the Stull United Methodist Church Fellowship Hall (251 N 1600th Rd, LeCompton) from 6:00-9:00 p.m. Registration will begin at 6:00 and the provided dinner will begin at 6:15. At 6:45 introductions and speakers will begin. Funding for the meal is being provided by the Upper Wakarusa WRAPS.

Yield is money and accuracy affects your yields. That's why our planters are built with specific technologies at the crucial points in the planter's operation to allow seed to move efficiently and uninterrupted from hopper to trench-right where you want it.

Get the bottom line on planter accuracy and see how it affects your bottom line. Visit us online at whiteplanters.com to find your nearest White Planters dealer.

Depth of soybean seed plays a major factor in whether seedlings are able to emerge. In most cases, farmers aim to plant soybeans between 1 and 1 1/2 inches deep. In a university study, researchers showed that as depth varied from optimum soybean plant emergence rate dropped by as much as 70%. Source: Iowa State University, North Dakota State University

As the depth of planting increases, the emergence rate of plants falls off considerably. Only White Planters has a patented calibration system for setting and quickly verifying that you're planting at a precise depth.

No more counting holes

Our depth adjustment handle provides a visual indication of planting depth in inches along all row units from .25 to 4.5 inches in 1/4 inch increments.

Calibrate like no other

Our patented calibration system gives you confidence that the depth indicator is accurate through the entire depth range. The gauge wheel depth adjustment mechanism contains a threaded eye-bolt for the calibration of the seed planting depth. We're the only planter with this design.

World of hurt

When my father told me he'd had a nasty bout of shingles, that it was the most excruciating pain he'd ever experienced, I had no idea what he was talking about. The word brought to mind roofing tiles, or, as I sometimes see in deep woods on hot muggy mornings, bright orange clusters of Laetiporus sulphureus, better known as sulphur shelf mushrooms. Neither conjured the slightest association to pain, though I recall bashing my thumb once when helping a friend roof his house.

Maybe I should have paid more attention. About two months ago what felt like a particularly nasty boil below my left shoulder blade began tormenting me. My wife insisted that nothing was visible. Unlike most boils (besides its odd invisibility), this affliction seemed to be not merely beneath the thin sheath of skin but as deep as bones and tendons and nerves. Eventually, I thought, it would make itself known, so I went along with the discomfort for several weeks until during a 15-hour wedding shoot any questions I had about its source were answered with a vengeance.

The "boil" exploded into an excruciating rash that felt as if my skin were on fire. Random lances of white-hot pain shot through me from my core outward like intense solar flares. Nor was the analogy far off: my nerves were going supernova.

By the time I got home I was in agony with a hypersensitive area the size of a saucer spreading from beneath my left shoulder blade to my lower spine. The spine was the worst—when it flared the pain blasted through my central nervous system like a freight train. It didn't take long to figure out that it was shingles, a viral infection related to chicken pox. Sleep was impossible. A quick check on the Internet confirmed my diagnosis and added to the unpleasantness—according to the Mayo Clinic and the Centers for Disease Control, there is no cure, only a lessening of symptoms after medication and treatment. Even then, relief might take days or weeks, nor does the virus ever fully dissipate. Once you have shingles it's part of you, like freckles or green eyes.

Nevertheless, I'm a tenacious fool who distrusts the medical establishment and, admittedly, the criminally-expensive medications that are often prescribed. Regardless of the breathtaking suffering,

I resolved to ride it out. Until, that is, the third day. If anything, the pain was even more severe. Ibuprofen helped but too many and you lose your liver. The rash itched fiercely but was too sensitive and painful to touch. The overall effects were so vicious and debilitating that Torquemada would have been impressed. To call the virus "shingles" is a horrible understatement. Shingles are what you put on your roof to make it waterproof. Varicella-zoster virus makes you wish you were dead. More apt terms might be the Ragnarök

Rash, named for the Norse end times, or the Inquisitional Infection. Then again, the Apocalypse Affliction has a nice ring to it.

I was in the doctor's office early Monday morning. By afternoon I was on medication. There were some immediate improvements within 24 hours, and subsequent improvements in the following week. I was on the mend, the rash drying out and crusting over, the pain lessening. From talking to friends about their own episodes with shingles, I got off pretty lightly. One friend had it spread to her eyes and she nearly lost her vision. Another had it spread over most of his body. I was lucky. And then I wasn't.

At first I thought my back went out, a usually occurrence this time of year. Visits to the chiropractor straightened me out, but never for long. More research led me to believe that I was one of the unlucky seven percent who get nerve damage in the lower back. The damage can be short-term or long-term, depending on a host of variables. About the only treatment available is prescription painkillers, the highly addictive type that you read about in crime reports. I'd rather take my chances on pain.

I'm not sure how this will turn out. Some days are better, some worse. When it's bad it's debilitating; when it's good I'm grateful. I don't complain and I don't feel sorry for myself. But I do tell friends who haven't experienced shingles to get vaccinated. According to the CDC it's only about 50 percent effective for people over the age of 60, but even then it should reduce the effects. Considering that those who have had chicken pox are susceptible — and that means most of us over the age of 50 — the odds are not favorable. I compare the virus to computer hard drives: it's not a matter of if they will crash, but when. Or, as Clint Eastwood was fond of asking perps in his Dirty Harry movies, "Are you feeling lucky, punk? Well, are you?"

Trust me, you're not that lucky. Get the shot.

Blach returning to KLA convention for popular outlook session

How long record cattle prices will last and the rate of cow herd expansion will be two topics addressed by CattleFax executive vice president Randy Blach during his market outlook, December 4 at the KLA Convention in Wichita. His presentation will be part of Beef Industry University, sponsored by the Farm Credit Associations of Kansas. Blach will tie in prospects for competing protein supplies, predictions for feed prices and a forecast for overall meat demand. He also will share thoughts on what factors will shape the U.S. and world economy in 2015 and how the macroeconomy will impact the beef industry.

The KLA Convention will take place December 3-5 at the Wichita Hyatt and Century II Convention Center. KLA members should have received registration materials in the mail. Registration is available online by clicking here. The Wichita Hyatt is full, but rooms remain at the Fairfield Inn & Suites at (316) 201-1400, Drury Plaza Hotel - Broadview at (800) 325-0720 or Hotel at Waterwalk at (866) 822-6274. Be sure to tell the hotels you're with KLA to get the special convention rate.

BAXTER BLACK

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

The Silent Partner

Her name's on the note at the Valley Bank, boys, Though she might have questioned the loan

She signed her John Henry 'neath yours on the line

And she will 'til the kids are all grown.

Nobody's counted the pickups she's pulled

Or measured the miles she's put on the rake

Kept track of the pancakes or lunches she's packed

Or the number of times she lay there awake

Praying her prayers for the man in her bed.

God only knows, 'cause He's keepin' track.

She's buildin' up interest somewhere down the line

To use in a trade on your first cardiac.

She puts up with cows she knows you should cull

Scourin' calves on the livin' room floor,

Tracks in the bathroom and mud on the sheets,

Flies in the kitchen from broken screen doors.

She patiently listens to stories you tell

Recounting the skill of your Blue Heeler mate.

She wishes, herself, if that dog was so smart

You could teach that potlicker to open a gate!

She offers opinions that seldom sink in

'Til time, oft' as not, proves she was right.

But it's darn hard to figger how she could'a known?

You're not the only one who worries at night.

She's old as the mountain and young as the spring
Timeless in labor and wisdom and love.

Of all of God's creatures that man gets to share

The wife of a cowman was sent from above.

So lay there tonight when you go to bed.

Remember your partner, she's tried and she's true.

You're lucky, my man, to have such a friend

Take care of her, 'cause she takes care of you.

Grass & Grain columnist Jim Gray was presented the Donna Malsom Memorial Ambassador Award at the annual conference of the Smoky Hill Trail Association in Russell on Saturday, October 18. Pictured, from left, are Mike Baughn, Brewster; Leo Oliva, Woodston and Gray, author of The Way West. Gray received the award in recognition of his significant contributions to the preservation and promotion of the Smoky Hill Trail, especially research, tour guide, and service on the Board of Directors.

Kansas company building drones for farmers

(AP) - A company in Neodesha is building drones that its owner believes could someday help farmers watch over their fields without spending hours walking or driving through their property.

The company, called AgEagle, has shipped 125 unmanned aircraft systems to customers across the world since Jan. 1. AgEagle was started by Bret Chilcott, a former aircraft employee who grew up on a farm near Udall.

Chilcott says his firm is a pioneer in an industry that he believes will grow quickly, despite current federal regulations that prohibit commercial use of drones.

The Hutchinson News reports the machines could someday allow farmers to map out fields using imagery to detect how a crop is growing. Data collected by the drones would be sent to a laptop for study by the farmer.

Biochemist lays groundwork for creating a celiac-safe wheat

By Julia Debes
What would it take for celiacs to be able to have their wheat — and eat it too?
That is exactly what Dr. Chris Miller hopes to achieve in a research project funded by Kansas wheat farmers through the Kansas Wheat Commission.
Miller, a biochemist working on cereal proteins, is laying the groundwork for creating a celiac-safe wheat — and one that could still make a great-tasting, good-looking loaf of bread.
Step One: Identifying Reactivity
Miller will first identify the level of celiac disease reactivity in 300 different cultivars in four different categories: currently planted Kansas wheat varieties, historically popular wheat varieties, new experimental wheat lines and wild wheat relatives.
Miller will literally put these samples to the test — relying on the reaction between human antibodies and wheat proteins.
Antibodies are the defenders of the human body, each developed to remove a specific “threat.” For people with celiac disease, a portion of their antibodies have identified gluten as something that may cause harm to the body. When they consume gluten, antibodies defend, which causes damage to the small intestine. Every celiac sufferer’s sensitivity to gluten is a little different, which is why some just get an upset stomach and others end up in the hospital after consuming gluten.

This means there is not one antibody that reacts to one protein. Instead, an array of human antibodies and their variations react to potentially hundreds of different wheat proteins — or even just fragments of proteins.
To match wheat proteins with the custom-made human antibodies with which they react, Miller will use a process called antibody staining.
Miller will take all of the individual proteins from one wheat variety and stick them in a gel like pieces of fruit in Grandma’s prize Jell-O salad. The human antibodies are then washed with a colored stain and then mixed into the gel. If the human antibody finds its wheat protein target, they stick together and show up as a colored band.

Proteins without an attached antibody remain invisible, and unmatched antibodies simply wash away. The more dense the color, the more antibodies that reacted, or the higher level of reactivity for that specific wheat variety to human celiac disease.
With this information, Miller can rank each cultivar for its level of reaction. Wheat breeders can use Miller’s rack-and-stack to screen new and upcoming varieties for lower naturally occurring levels of reaction for human celiac disease.
Step Two: Down to the DNA
Immunoprecipitation is a process where a single antibody is adhered to the surface of a microscopic magnetic bead. The miniature magnets are then fixed to a surface — like hundreds of super-tiny magnets stuck to a fridge.

Each person’s immune system has different antibodies, however, so Miller must identify any wheat protein fragment that could potentially react to any one person’s antibodies and create a celiac reaction.
To find the exact epitopes, or protein fragments, that react to human celiac disease antibodies, Miller will use a process called immunoprecipitation. In this process, a single antibody is adhered to the surface of a microscopic magnetic bead. The miniature magnets are then fixed to a surface.
Then the proteins from a single wheat sample are washed over the surface. The reactive proteins stick; the others simply wash away.
From there, Miller can isolate and sequence the reactive cereal proteins. These sequences provide targets to sequence the specific genes that cause a human celiac disease reaction.

Results Benefit More Than Farmers
Very few people (1:141 or less than 1%) have a condition called celiac disease, an autoimmune reaction to the gliadin and glutenin portions of wheat.
At the end, Miller will have created the most comprehensive study of wheat proteins related to celiac disease ever published.
Kansas wheat farmers are the only group supporting research into identifying the exact DNA that causes a celiac reaction as well as the levels of reactivity in wheat varieties. The results, however, would be life-changing for the three million Americans with celiac disease.

As Miller said, “This is a huge contribution to science — not just to Kansas, but to all of human health.”

The reserve champion market lamb at the Central Kansas Free Fair was shown by Natalie Harris.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Demand moderate to good for dairy alfalfa, moderate for alfalfa pellets, light to moderate for grinding alfalfa and grass hay. Hay trade slow to moderate. Mild fall weather would be good for fall harvesting and baling, but heavy dew every morning delays the starting time and slows the curing of hay crops. There should be good wheat pasture this fall into winter and crop residue grazing is shaping up to be good. If you have hay for sale or pasture to rent or need hay or grazing, use the services of the Hay and Pasture Exchange: www.kfb.org/commodities/haypasture/index.html

Wool export compliance starts with the producer

The American Sheep Industry Association (ASI) recently informed U.S. wool and sheepskin exporters that China has increased its focus on examining products at the port of entry for banned contaminants.

Most countries, including the United States, have environmental laws that prohibit the importation of products containing contaminants such as animal manure that is either attached to the product or in the package with the product. China is no exception.

“ASI has been aware of China’s scrutiny on manure as it applies to wool but we have now been advised of a similar focus in the sheepskin arena,” said Rita Kourlis Samuelson, ASI wool marketing director.

China is making radical changes in its environmental laws and in the enforcement of existing laws by tightening regulations and setting new requirements. Under scrutiny are two products of direct concern to the sheep industry — early stage wool processing and leather manufacturing. At the discretion of the Chinese Customs (CIQ), contaminated products can be refused entry, destroyed or, at best, fumigated at the cost of the supplier. CIQ is developing a system that applies a “risk factor” to individual companies that export to China.

When U.S. wool companies export product, they work to ensure they are in compliance with the import laws and regulations of that country. Producers can improve the marketability of their wool by adhering to the guidelines set forth in the Choice and Premium Wool Clip Certification, which facilitates in keeping as much manure out as possible.

“When producers and shearers adapt to the standards of ASI’s wool quality program, wool buyers have a higher level of confidence that the products they are exporting are free of manure and other contaminants,” continued Samuelson. “China is an important market for the United States with approximately 50 percent of all U.S. wool exports going to China in fiscal year 2012/2013.”

Letters to the Editor

Letter to the editor:

Some may say that the youth of Kansas are the future. And while that is true, I believe a more accurate statement is that water is our future.

Some places in Kansas, especially out west where the Ogallala Aquifer is running dry, difficult decisions are being made. Decisions that will impact generations of Kansans to come. Places that have grown corn and fed cattle are going to have to figure out new ways to make the most of the water that is there to make sure that future generations have options to survive. It will not be easy, nor will it be a fast change, but change must happen.

It might mean making investments in better forms of irrigation system, or growing new crops that need less water, or finding out if researchers can make plants grow with less water than they do today.

Gov. Brownback has called for the development of a 50-year water vision. It is time that the young and the old and those who live in the dry parts of Kansas and those who live where water seems to be abundant come together to figure out what we can do as a state to make a difference.

A draft of the plan is going to be shared at the Governor's Water Conference in Manhattan in November. I would encourage you to get involved, to hear what is being said, to give your opinions and then figure out how you can take part. Conservation is something we can all do. It's not too late but we need to start now.

There is more information available on the Kansas Water Office's website at KWO.org.

Do it for me - and future generations of Kansans who want to continue to call this great state home.

To the Editor of Grass and Grain:

As a long-time subscriber to the Grass and Grain, I would like take this opportunity to address the other subscribers of this respected and established media of rural Kansas.

Election day, Tuesday, November 4th, is fast approaching. What it means for all qualified U.S. citizens is that we will again have the opportunity to cast our votes for the persons we feel will do, or have done the best job of representing our local, state, and federal offices. And, if they have done what they promised they would do before they were elected. With this letter, I'm encouraging every Kansas voter to vote for our leader, Gov. Sam Brownback.

I grew up in a Kansas rural, agricultural area of our state. Wheat fields, corn fields, windmills, that's what I knew. After college, I left Kansas, and lived in other parts of our country, and overseas. Eventually, I came back, and even though I no longer live in a rural environment, I know that the rural, agricultural areas are where you will find much of the backbone, strength, and integrity of the people of our great state.

Sam Brownback came from these areas also. He knows who we are, and what we represent. That's why he's doing all that he can to promote our state to the rest of the U.S. and internationally, and is helping our rural economy in the process. In Governor Brownback's Road Map for Kansas, some of the highlights of what he has already accomplished are:

- He has implemented the Rural Opportunity Zones program;
- Per-capita disposable

personal income has increased by 10.8%;

- We have a record number of new business formations in the state;
- Taxes on small businesses are down.

These are but a few of the successes that this governor has lead us to accomplish in the last four years. With his focus on growing the Kansas economy, Governor Brownback's goal for the next four years is 25,000 new jobs per year. That's 100,000 new jobs for the hardworking people of Kansas. The rural and agricultural areas of Kansas will not be ignored in his plan to achieve this goal. Parts of this plan include:

- Make Kansas the top location for companies considering reshoring their facilities from overseas.
- Execute a statewide export strategy, with a particular focus on small to medium sized businesses.
- Focus workforce and training programs on assisting veterans' entry into the private sector job market.
- Support efforts to develop moderate-income rural housing.

• Grow the agricultural industry by expanding the international market and creating new opportunities for value-added enterprises and special production.

Information on this plan and more can be found on the website, www.Brownback.com.

Governor Brownback has already proven to us that he is more than capable of implementing plans, and making them succeed. Right now, he is all set and ready to bring even more success and recognition to our state. I am urging everyone to make our votes count - for ourselves and our communities: vote for Sam Brownback on Tuesday, November 4th. Let's get behind our leader, and keep moving toward success!!

One hundred years ago, Dr. Norman Borlaug was born. His semi-dwarf, disease-resistant wheat spurred the Green Revolution and saved more than a billion lives from starvation. It is fitting that the 2014 World Food Prize, which Borlaug created, will be awarded on October 16 to a wheat researcher for the first time. And Dr. Sanjaya Rajaram is not just any wheat breeder - he was Borlaug's successor. Rajaram amplified Borlaug's legacy of innovation at the International Maize and Wheat Improvement Center (CIMMYT) in Mexico. His 480 wheat varieties have been released in 51 countries on six continents, planted on more than 140 million acres, increased yield potential by 20 to 25 percent and resulted in 200 million more tons of grain delivered to global markets each year.

Rajaram's childhood on a small farm in Uttar Pradesh, a state in northeastern India, inspired him with the desire to improve world food production. His parents enabled his education by sending him to primary and secondary school in a village five kilometers (3.1 miles) away at a time when roughly 96 percent of rural India had no formal education.

Rajaram repeatedly earned top honors and scholarships as well as a bachelor's degree in agriculture from the University of Gorakhpur and a master's degree in genetics and plant breeding from the Indian Agricultural Research Institute. But, his doctorate mentor would introduce Rajaram to Borlaug. At the University of Sydney, Rajaram earned his doctorate degree in plant breeding, studying under Dr. I.A. Watson. Watson referred his new student to his old classmate at the University of Minnesota, and Rajaram began his work at CIMMYT in 1969. Rajaram and Borlaug worked side-by-side in the fields of El Batán, Toluca and Ciudad Obregón. Just three years later, in 1972, Borlaug asked Rajaram to be his successor as the head of CIMMYT's wheat breeding program. Rajaram extended Borlaug's great work. According to the World Food Prize website, Rajaram's focus was on "wide adaptation of new plants to differing climate and soil conditions; superior grain quality; and increasing the resistance to diseases and pests that had devastated farmers' crops." Rajaram utilized Borlaug's shuttle-breeding approach, under which two generations of wheat are produced each year by planting a crop in both the northern and southern hemisphere. This cut breeding times for new varieties in half. He also crossed winter and spring varieties, resulting in lines that had higher, more reliable yields under a multitude of climatic conditions and geographic locations.

Rajaram's new varieties could be grown in marginal areas, including small mountain plots in Pakistan, remote regions of China and acidic soils in Brazil. His concept of "slow rusting" incorporated multiple genes that each have minor effects on rust's development. Working together, the genes minimized the devastating disease's effect on wheat yields without causing the pathogen to mutate. In addition to his own work, Rajaram helped establish a worldwide exchange of information and resources between researchers, which did not exist in the global scientific wheat network. His work continues, although he now operates his own seed company, Resource Seeds International. Borlaug's own words in a 2007 letter described Rajaram's legacy best: "You have developed into the greatest present-day wheat scientist in the world...have made and continue to make many important contributions to further improve world wheat production... have learned to work effectively in many different countries with political leaders of different ideologies ... and are a scientist of great vision.”

Rajaram accepted the World Food Prize on October 16 during the Borlaug Dialogue in Des Moines, Iowa.

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crofts

There was widespread cash cattle trade at $170 and there were several new contract highs in the live cattle futures. The feeder cattle, on the other hand, were stuck in a sideways trading pattern. The feeder cattle index has been near $240 for quite a while and seems to be stuck there. The lack of new highs is a little bothersome and there is a good chance that the index will start the week softer, so we may see the November feeder futures break out of the sideways range to the downside. That is not to say that the top is in, but it does look like we will see a deeper correction in the feeders.

The cattle on feed report didn't suggest we are going to see a change in the bullish fundamentals any time soon. The on feed number was at 99%, placements were at 101%, but that was 101% of a very small number, and marketings were at 99%. We still need to plan on beef production being lower than year ago levels for quite some time. Look for a correction in the live cattle and then yet another run to new highs.

The grain markets were pretty lively and the soybeans were the upside leader. Export sales have been very good and we still haven't completely gotten past the tight supplies of the old crop in some locations. Those factors along with the November option expiration helped to create quite a short covering rally in the soybeans, which allowed the November contract to climb back to $10.00 for a little bit. By the time we got to the close on Friday it seemed that the reality of the big crop was coming into play and we could be looking at some pressure ahead.

It is a similar story for the corn market, but the corn wasn't nearly as explosive as the beans. We have seen multiple closes above the 50-day moving average in the December contract, which is often a bullish sign. However, there is a tendency to see new lows in the December contract later in the fall when we have a big crop or are in a bearish market. Therefore, I still think we have to look at this rally as a selling opportunity as opposed to rally to chase higher. The biggest thing this rally has accomplished is that it has shrunk producers insurance payments and weakness now won't do much to increase them, so if you have unprotected bushels you need price protection.

The wheat market has been on a good run higher lately, but that came crashing to an end on Friday. There were reversals lower in all three U.S. wheat contracts and the Paris Milling wheat. I find the December KW contract particularly bothersome since it failed to breach the 62% retracement of the last leg down. It essentially double-topped at that level then posted the outside day down on the chart. If the charts mean anything then we have to sell wheat and look for a retest the of the contract lows in the near future.

Adding to the negativity in the wheat is the poor export sales report and the likelihood that we see very good crop condition ratings Monday. The combination of fundamentals and technicals should weigh on the market.

Recession causes crash, slow recovery in Kansas' forest industry

In the past decade, Kansas has seen hazardous ice storms, devastating drought and soaring grain prices, which make deforestation increasingly likely. However, the reductions seen in the state's forest products industries aren't linked to a physical loss in forestland, but rather a loss in consumer demand. Blame is cast to the Great Recession, which may have only officially lasted from December 2007 to June 2009, but its impact on the economy and the entire timber industry can still be seen today.

A report recently released by the U.S. Forest Service (USFS), titled "Kansas Timber Industry," indicates the status of the industry in 2009 and tracks changes from the last inventory conducted in 2003.

In 2009, an almost 50 percent reduction in the amount of timber processed by mills occurred — a loss of about 1.6 million cubic feet. Kansas' sawmill receipts showed a decrease of 65 percent since 2003.

It would be easy to blame this trend on the burst of the housing bubble that began the recession or the country's shift toward electronic communication and record keeping.

But, Kansas is primarily a hardwood state, meaning the types of trees harvested such as walnut, oak and cottonwood, don't serve the same purpose as the softwoods used in construction and paper manufacturing. Most timber processed locally in Kansas is used for pallets and crates, but the higher quality logs are exported to other states such as Missouri or sent overseas to be made into furniture.

Demand for forest products Brian Briggeman, a Kansas State University associate professor of agricultural economics, explained the situation as one of the many real-life examples of supply and demand. During the recession, Briggeman said the nation saw surging unemployment rates, shrinking real wages and capped salaries.

"If you can't afford a house, how can you afford furniture to put in it?" said Briggeman, who explained that the steep drop in disposable income affected consumer demand, and people began searching for cheaper substitutes.

Instead of going to their local vendor to buy the high-quality solid oak furniture like many of their parents and grandparents once had, consumers turned to places such as IKEA and Wal-Mart to save money.

"The question has become, will demand ever fully come back for furniture?" Briggeman said. "We have improved, but I wouldn't say we're to a point where the U.S. consumer is ready to go out and spend like they did before the recession."

Available supply

According to the USFS report, in 2009 there were 2.27 million acres of forestland in Kansas. Even with a million cubic feet harvested annually, an average of almost 15 cubic feet of annual net growth per acre remains in Kansas' forests, suggesting that the number of trees is not the issue.

Because most of the state's forestland is privately owned, the problem now lies in the landowners' willingness to harvest, which is most often dictated by market price.

Charles Barden, state Extension forester for K-State Research and Extension, said part of the problem began before the recession fully hit. "Like so many other things, there was a bubble in the hardwood industry," he explained. "China was buying every walnut log they could lay their hands on at the time. There were reports of buyers literally going out and buying logs as small as 14 inches in diameter, which is kind of a small log, but people were happy because they could finally sell such a small log for a good price."

Barden compared this situation to a rancher that can either sell a 400-pound calf now, or wait until that calf grows to be 800 pounds. The larger the diameter, the more money the log is worth.

When the recession hit, international buyers no longer wanted to pay high dollar for raw materials to manufacture a product they couldn't sell back to the United States. Consequently, landowners stopped harvesting their forestland.

"Working in the woods can be expensive and dangerous," Barden said. "What happens is you can always sell a log, but the landowners decide if they want to sell that log for $50 when they remember their neighbor sold one the same size for $500 a couple years ago. So, they don't sell it, it keeps getting bigger and they wait for the market to come up."

Like consumer demand, the forest products industry has been slow to recover, but it is improving. As consumers become more active, so will the markets.

"Luckily the trees we didn't cut are still growing," Barden said. "They are a long-term crop. Demand has already started to slowly come back, and we are seeing more walnut being harvested and more logs being cut."

Barden's message to the landowners waiting for higher prices is simple: it's okay to wait, but be sure to provide proper tree management to promote good health and growth of their tree crop. He also encourages contacting the Kansas Forest Service if anyone has questions or needs assistance developing a marketing plan for their timber harvest.

For more information about the Kansas timber industry, landowners can visit the Kansas Forest Service website, www.kansasforest.org.

Kansas Cattlemen's Convention offers something for everyone

With growth and expansion, this year's Kansas Cattlemen's 16th Annual Convention and Trade Show will have something for everyone. Producers and the public are welcome to come by the Western State Bank Expo Center in Dodge City on November 15th to catch one of the many demonstrations that the association is hosting, from working cattle dogs with Andy Befort to a cattle evaluation demonstration conducted by USDA. Domenic Varrichio from Schwieterman, Inc. will be providing the latest market update and will answer questions about trends and what the market might hold. A Beef Quality Assurance (BQA) presentation will be provided by Dr. Dave Rethorst from the Beef Cattle Institute. Those attending the program will qualify and can receive BQA certification free of charge. As well, more than 75 exhibitors will be on hand throughout the day to offer an array of products and services at the trade show.

"This year's Kansas Cattlemen's Convention and Trade Show is bigger and better than ever. The trade show and demonstrations are free and open to the public, and I encourage everyone to come out and see what Kansas Cattlemen's Association has to offer. Kids can spend time at our KidZONE where we will offer fun times with a bouncy house and an obstacle course courtesy of Waters True Value. Producers can get educational and operational information from the industry's leading experts, and the event offers the opportunity for folks to visit with old friends and make new ones," stated KCA executive director, Tyler Dupy.

The event will be held from 7:00 a.m.-7:00 p.m. The day's events will wind down with a fundraiser auction, where funds raised will go towards the KCA Scholarship Fund and to help provide resources and educational programs in support of the cattle industry and independent producers. Two items already donated to the event include a Concrete® Cattle Waterer courtesy of Advanced Agri-Direct, which will be raffled off, and a Hay Feeder graciously donated by Go Bob Pipe and Steel Sales will be auctioned with proceeds going directly to scholarships.

An upgraded registration for the Kansas Cattlemen's Convention and Trade Show is available for $75, and includes premium seating, a luncheon and the banquet dinner. Meals will be professionally catered, courtesy of the Kansas Cattlemen's Association. The luncheon will consist of USA beef brisket with sides and a dessert. The luncheon registration can be separately purchased for $35. The USA Beef banquet consists of a 12 ounce Premium Angus steak with potatoes, sides and delicious cake, and is offered for $40. Upgraded registration and meal reservations are highly encouraged to ensure an adequate number of meals are prepared.

Those interested in pre-registering or making meal reservations may do so by calling the Kansas Cattlemen's office at 785-238-1483 or going online. Certified Angus Beef® provides high quality on the high seas

By Miranda Reiman
Meal planning and grocery buying for a busy family, week in and week out, is a big chore. Now imagine trying to feed 4,000 people, when you're hundreds of miles from land.
Welcome to Lars Kristiansen's world. As director of culinary operations for Norwegian Cruise Line, he works with a team each week to ensure 50,000 guests on 13 ships are all fed, and fed well.
Since last summer, Kristiansen has included the Certified Angus Beef® (CAB®) brand as part of that guest satisfaction plan. Norwegian is the only brand licensee on the high seas.

"It's all about what you want to eat and when you want to eat it," Kristiansen says, noting the company pioneered the "Freestyle Cruising" concept decades ago. While vacationers enjoy flexibility, making that work takes strategic detail control behind the scenes.
The sheer logistics of stocking a ship for an entire week of entertainment and service might seem daunting, but a comprehensive record-keeping system makes it manageable. A food database with 1,700 different items helps Norwegian decide the makeup of the 15 or so 40-foot containers its takes to load a medium-sized vessel.
"Most guests book in advance so we have quite a bit of detail on where people are coming from and things like that beforehand," he says. "There is time to analyze what the consumer base looks like for each cruise to be sure we're prepared."

Kristiansen and his eight-member executive culinary team try to compare like itineraries to make informed predictions, which is especially important because of the company's strict sourcing protocols. "(Proteins) come from one source and we ship it to all corners of the globe to make sure that we maintain consistency," he says. If a food item makes it on the ship, it's already passed some intense scrutiny.
"We do use a lot of market research data, in-house and other sources, to make sure that whatever we develop is relevant for our guests," he says. "It's all about leading the industry with high quality and consistency." Rob Crook, center-of-the-plate specialist with SYSCO South Florida, says the Norwegian crew took part in numerous CAB cutting tests before they decided to visit the Buckhead Aging and Production facility in Auburndale, Fla.
Kristiansen and others toured the dry aging coolers, the cutting rooms and more. Then they met with the senior management in quality control, production and operations, before selecting the premium beef brand for the onboard upscale concepts, Cagney's Steakhouse and Le Bistro French restaurant.
Of course, being sure the right ingredients are onboard is only part of the puzzle and must be matched with crew training. "It's an amazing process, to see all the talent it takes to get each steak delivered and prepared," says Emily DePompei, CAB assistant director of international marketing at the time. "It really speaks to the level of teamwork that goes into each dining experience."

Each vessel has one executive chef leading more than 220 foodservice crew members. When they switched to CAB, the cruise line brought brand staff and partners from SYSCO onboard to do trainings for everyone from maitre d's and waitstaff to managers and line cooks.
"Certified Angus Beef steak is cut from the best animals, managed by super professionals, and when we get it, it's the best steak on the planet," Kristiansen says. "When it goes on the plate to the actual guest, it must be the same quality."
To encompass that, each training session covered the entire beef industry, from cow-calf producer right up to the meat delivery and preparation.

"We believe in constant training and the power of knowledge for our crew. We want them to feel comfortable in talking about (beef) with our guests," he says. Most meals are included as part of the vacation package, but travelers can upgrade to premium dining options, like Cagney's and Le Bistro, for a $25- to $30-per-head fee.

"Sure, they're concerned about food costs, but they're more concerned about making Norwegian the premiere cruise line," Crook says. Cagney's was recently named among the "Ten best cruise ship steakhouses" by USA Today, and they've increased advanced reservations for premium dining.
"We've also seen a higher guest satisfaction score, which is important to us as we differentiate from other cruise lines," Kristiansen says.

DePompei says CAB is happy to be part of that strategy.
"It's an entirely different realm to reach our customers," she says. "It just further shows the true global reach that we have."

Young Stockmen's Academy tours all industry segments

The third installment of the Kansas Livestock Association (KLA) Young Stockmen's Academy (YSA) was held October 6-8. The group of 20 young producers spent three days touring various segments of the beef and dairy industries in southern and western Kansas. Merck Animal Health is the exclusive sponsor of the YSA program.

The first stop on the tour was at Bechtel Ranch near Eureka. Veterinarian and ranch owner Roger Bechtel discussed his cow-calf and stocker operation and conducted a Beef Quality Assurance injection site demonstration for the class. Stops also were made at McCurry Angus Ranch near Burrton and CB Farms of Preston. John McCurry told the group the focus of the Angus seedstock operation is to raise high-quality bulls that meet the needs of their commercial cow-calf customers. All McCurry bulls are DNA-tested, which can provide as much information on a young bull as if he had recorded more than 20 progeny records. Berry and Carla Bortz, owners of CB Farms, gave an inside look into their operation, which consists of a commercial cow-calf herd, registered Angus seedstock operation, feedyard and farming business. The Bortzes finish all their own calves, along with some purchased from bull customers and market each through U.S. Premium Beef. One of their primary goals is to increase the number of Certified Angus Beef and Prime carcasses produced each year. During a tour of the milking parlor at Royal Farms Dairy near Garden City, manager Kyle Averhoff told the YSA class the dairy milks about 6,500 cows twice daily and markets more than 13 million pounds of milk per month. Jeff George, manager of Finney County Feeders of Garden City, highlighted various aspects of the feedyard, including a newly built mill, which is used to customize feed rations for each pen of cattle. The group also toured the Cargill packing plant in Dodge City.

The 2014 class includes Bryan Armendariz, Chapman; Sarah Bryant, Winfield; Cody Campfield, St. John; Isaac Carr, Junction City; Neil Cates, Beloit; Kyla Clawson, Satanta; Rachel Collinge, Eureka; Jayme-lynn Farney, Parsons; Andrew Froetschner, Larned; Ryan Gasche, Cassoday; Robby Haynes, Abilene; Lindsey Huseman, Ellsworth; Brandy Jones, Wamego; Spencer Jones, Wamego; Ty Josefiak, Rozel; Marisa Kleysteuber, Garden City; Evan Lesser, Palco; Laura Mushrush, Strong City; Jake Pannbacker, Washington; and Chase Thompson, Scott City.

The fourth YSA session will be held during the KLA Convention, December 3-5. YSA members will have the opportunity to attend educational sessions and help form policy during council and committee meetings that will guide the association in 2015.

"The kids were really surprised to see cattle on the street, so close up. They couldn't believe how huge the horns were," she says.

A spokesman for the Boot Hill Casino, Ryan Deutsch, says 25,000 people watched the cattle drive, which the casino plans to make an annual event.

Harris, of Boot Hill Museum, says the museum continues to update and expand its collections because with or without live longhorns, Dodge City's appeal is timeless.

"Dodge City is all about the cowboy. Paul Harvey used to say about cowboys that nobody ever lived that either wasn't one or didn't want to be one. And by cowboy, I include women. Kansas had a lot of famous women who rode and worked cattle."

John Lehr of Quick Draw brought his co-producer, Nancy Hower, with him to the cattle drive so she could see the town. His ultimate motive is to bring production of some episodes to Dodge City if the series is renewed. If that happens, however, don't be looking for any longhorns in scenes.

"I wanted to use longhorns when we did a cattle drive scene in California, but after seeing them live in Dodge City, I'm glad we didn't," he says. "I had no idea how big their horns are and how much room they take up."

So if you want a longhorn closeup, you'd better get the heck into Dodge.

Osborne signs agreement to distribute pig production equipment in Brazil

Osborne Industries, Inc., a leading manufacturer of pig production equipment, has announced it has reached an agreement with Brazil-based manufacturing company, Plasson do Brasil, to distribute Osborne's pig management equipment in Brazil. The announcement comes just one week before Plasson and Osborne will introduce their partnership to the Brazilian market at PorkExpo, Brazil's largest pork-specific conference and trade show, October 28-30, 2014, in Foz de Iguazu, Brazil.

The development of Osborne's new distribution partnership with Plasson will allow Brazilian pig farmers to capture the unique strengths of both equipment suppliers. Plasson's expertise in the manufacture and sales of agricultural products, along with Osborne's experience in developing pig production equipment for over 40 years, will benefit farming practices in the emerging market in Brazil.

Osborne's South America Sales Representative, Claudio Faundez, said, "Osborne's unique relationship with Plasson will allow the pig industry in Brazil to modernize production practices with 21st century technology and North American pig production techniques." Part of this agreement also includes the manufacturing of Osborne equipment parts and assembly by Plasson. "Having parts built and equipment assembled in Brazil is another huge advantage to Brazilian producers, with more affordable equipment and easier access to local financing," said Faundez.

According to George Eakin, president and chief executive officer of Osborne, Plasson is now qualified to supply and service Osborne's trademark products like the Stanfield pig heating pad and Big Wheel pig feeder. Plasson will also install and service the Osborne TEAM (Total Electronic Animal Management) electronic sow feeding (ESF) system, FIRE (Feed Intake Recording Equipment) pig performance testing system, and Weight Watcher pig growth management and sorting system.

Osborne and Plasson's pig production equipment will be on display at PorkExpo, October 28-30, 2014, at booth #29B.

Plasson do Brasil has led the Brazilian agricultural industry as a leading supplier for 18 years. Headquartered in Israel, Plasson has a distribution network in more than 80 countries, including manufacturing facilities in Germany, Italy, France, England, Australia, India and Brazil. The company will begin marketing Osborne and Plasson-branded products to the pork industry within the year. For more information about Plasson do Brasil, visit www.plasson.com.br.

Osborne Industries, Inc., is a leading manufacturer and distributor of advanced livestock production equipment for the pig industry. For more information about Osborne Industries, Inc., call 1-800-255-0316 (1-785-346-2192) or visit www.osbornelivestockequipment.com.

Shedding light on bioenergy: Universities inform about latest developments

Though it sounds relatively new, we humans have been using bioenergy since we first burned wood to warm our families and cook our food. Now, ethanol made from corn is available at service stations across the country and scientists continue to study plant- and animal-based materials to do everything from fuel our cars to power our factories and skyscrapers.

Bioenergy is energy derived from biological sources, such as plants or animals or their waste. Wind and solar energy are sometimes included.

A group of university engineers and scientists is spreading the word about work being done in bioenergy and its potential to reduce climate impacts linked to fossil fuels, increase the value of agricultural products, revitalize rural communities, bolster national security and curb U.S. reliance on imports.

“Midwest Bioenergy Outreach – A Land Grant Initiative” found at <http://cropwatch.unl.edu/bioenergy> is an ever-expanding collection of short recorded webinars, videos and other resources on topics ranging from plants being studied to create bioenergy such as soybeans, switchgrass and crop residues, to detailed information about ethanol production as well as solar and wind energy.

“Biofuels are quality fuels, but they do have different properties that consumers need to be aware of,” said Ed Brokesh, Kansas State University instructor in biological and agricultural engineering. “All fuels change over time. The fuels you can buy today are very different than what you could buy ten years ago. Both gasoline and diesel fuel formulations have changed and will continue to change dramatically. Engine and material technology has changed and will continue to change and that impacts how fuels can be formulated and what is possible to use as a fuel.”

“My personal belief is that bioethanol from corn is very well developed,” Brokesh said. “Cellulosic ethanol – made up of wood, grasses or the inedible parts of plants — has a distance to go yet, before it is as developed as corn-based ethanol.”

K-State, along with Michigan State University, Iowa State University, University of Nebraska, North Dakota State University, University of Missouri, Ohio State University and Penn State University are collaborating on the Midwest Bioenergy Outreach project.

Brokesh will give a presentation on ethanol and its impact on small and legacy engines and the harvest costs of biomass at the Extension, Energy and Environment Summit (<http://www.2014e3.org/> in Ames, Iowa later this month.

Conversion and infrastructure are among biggest challenges for cellulosic ethanol development

Brokesh said that when it comes to converting plant materials such as switchgrass and corn stover (leaves and stalks of corn left after harvest) into cellulosic ethanol, the conversion process and the development of infrastructure both still need work.

Lignin, an organic polymer in the cell wall of some plants that makes them rigid and woody, makes up about a third of corn stover, grass and straw, he said. “We really don’t have a good way to break it apart for conversion to ethanol or other uses. About all we can do right now is burn it.” There is also work to be done on developing the supply chain for biomass, Brokesh said. “First, we need a stable supply of material and a market for that material. This is a chicken or egg discussion that will take time to solve. Producers will not commit to producing the biomass until there is a market. The market for the material will not develop until there is enough material available to justify building a 100-million-gallon cellulosic ethanol plant.”

He noted that many will be watching the Abengoa Bioenergy Biomass of Kansas (ABBK) plant in Hugoton when it goes into production later this year. It’s the first-of-its-kind commercial scale biorefinery that will use its proprietary technology to produce renewable liquid fuel from cellulosic biomass, or plant fiber, according to the company’s website. “Everyone in the biofuel world is watching this venture closely to see how it works out,” Brokesh said. The second aspect of the cellulosic bioethanol equation, he said, is the infrastructure necessary to move the biomass around. “We have great infrastructure for corn, not so much for hay-type materials, though we are not without some of the basic tools. The roads, equipment and processes still need a lot of work,” he said, including the ability to move “unit train” level quantities of biomass from one place to another.

Development varies from one country to another
Even with the strides the United States has made in developing bioenergy, Brokesh said other countries are ahead of us.

“Brazil in particular, in my opinion, is light-years ahead of us. As I understand it, they have greater availability of ethanol at all filling stations as well as a lot more vehicles which can utilize higher blends of ethanol (Flex Fuel-type vehicles). They have the advantage of a large supply of sugar cane which makes it much easier to generate low cost ethanol. Further, there were some policy decisions made in the 70s as a result of the oil stocks that have put them on a path to greater use of ethanol fuels.”

European countries have focused on biodiesel development and are also trying different alternative energies such as wood pellets, wind and solar power, he said. “England has just converted a power plant to burn only biomass – wood pellets, grass bales, and ag waste — for the generation of electricity. I believe this plant accounts for 10 percent of electricity generated in England,” Brokesh said.

When it comes to different sources (feedstock) of bioenergy, every researcher has a favorite, he said.

“My favorite is sorghum, or energy cane,” he said, but other feedstocks such as corn stover, miscanthus, switchgrass, Indian grass, willow trees, wheat straw, big bluestem, little bluestem and others all show promise too.

Kansas is the perennial leader when it comes to U.S.

sorghum production. In 2013, Kansas produced 165 million bushels of the 389 million bushels produced across the United States. Texas was second at just under 129 million bushels.

“The thing is, feedstocks are going to be regional. What feeds Abengoa’s plant in Hugoton is going to be a different mix than what feeds DuPont’s facility in Iowa. One feedstock is not going to fit every region. Just as crops vary from region to region, so will feedstocks,” Brokesh said. “Over time we may see genetic development that can adapt a single feedstock to wider regions, but that could take decades.”

Stanley Stout Center serves as multipurpose facility

Just over a year after opening its doors, Kansas State University's Stanley Stout Center is proving it's more than just a livestock marketing facility. In March 2013, the building opened its doors with a dedication ceremony in honor of its namesake, longtime livestock auctioneer and K-State supporter Stanley Stout, who died in 2006. "There are two things I know about Stanley Stout," Dave Nichols, teaching coordinator and professor for the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry at K-State, told listeners at the building's dedication ceremony. "He hated long pre-sale speeches, and all sales start on time."

As he was clearly not a fan of wasted time, Stout would likely be impressed with the efforts given by the Livestock and Meat Industry Council, the Kansas State Foundation, the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry and more than 300 donors for the center.

Operational for just more than a year, the facility has hosted numerous campus and community-related events, including 4-H Discovery Days, banquets, youth events, Kansas Livestock Association meetings, Kansas Department of Agriculture meetings, retirement dinners, fall socials, and last year, a tailgate celebration at the K-State versus North Dakota State University football game. The building also plays host to academic courses, the Legacy sale and other livestock sales.

"The facility is turning out to be incredibly useful," said Ken Odde, head of the Department of Animal Sciences and Industry at K-State. "It's a very functional facility so we're really pleased with it."

Fundraising efforts started well enough in 2007, with about $200,000 raised toward a proposed cattle sale facility, but then it stalled for about five years. It was revived in 2012, then in just two years, more than two-thirds of the funds required to complete the facility were raised.

Agricultural producer and distinguished K-State alumnus Richard Porter helped revive fundraising efforts for the facility after learning of the project in 2011. Porter's enthusiasm reenergized the project and provided the momentum it needed to move forward.

"I didn't think there was any economic justification for a $700,000 sale arena used a few days a year, but I thought there was a huge need for a $1.5 million multi-use facility used nearly every day, that would also be a fantastic sale arena" Porter said.

"The original plan was for just one open area. So following a sale the bleachers would have to be torn down, and the guests would have to wait, till the tables and chairs were hauled in. This would be even more difficult because there was not storage for either,"

Porter explained. "I wanted it big enough that your sale or livestock event and tables could be set up in here so you could be doing two things at once. The size was nearly doubled, so the Stout Center also has a class room and offices."

Thanks to the functionality of the facility, Nichols is confident that the facility will host more sales and events in the future. Presently, K-State's Legacy Sale and the Kansas Beef Expo are the only two livestock sales that have been hosted at the Stanley Stout Center.

"We're adding some additional facilities and pens that will make it much nicer for other sales to be here," Nichols said. "All the things we add increases the flexibility of the place. It's a work in progress. We haven't reached its full potential, but we get more and more ideas all the time. The Department of Animal Sciences will continue to utilize the building to expand teaching opportunities to students."

Another spurt of fundraising came in the fall of 2013 paying off over half of the remaining debt, and Odde said the facility continues to make progress.

"We have a facility that is serving Kansas State University and the livestock industry in many different ways," Odde said. "We're very appreciative to all the people who have helped make that possible, especially the donors."

Emilie Fink, development officer for the College of Agriculture with the Kansas State University Foundation, said the Stanley Stout Center truly is a multi-purpose facility that is serving the needs of students, faculty, Extension and industry partners.

"Since the doors opened in 2013, the building has hosted numerous events and educational experiences, solidifying its need on our K-State campus," Fink said. "A contribution to this center benefits hundreds and thousands of people on an annual basis."

The idea for the new facility came from Stout himself, Nichols said, during one of K-State's livestock sales. With the sale formerly housed in a tent, Stout was both amused and unimpressed by the condition of its former facility.

Nichols said he recalls Stout making remarks about the ceiling of the purebred sale's tent, saying that if it started raining, there weren't enough buckets for all the holes. He believes that's what drove the idea of a sale center in Stout's name.

Stout was an entertainer, Nichols said, always pulling pranks on the kids. "He was a phenomenal auctioneer and a huge K-State supporter, but also one of those personalities that was bigger than life. He truly enjoyed life."

Nichols said the entire facility is a dedication to keeping a legacy alive. "It's a tremendous legacy of long-term leadership, livestock leaders, a dedication to Kansas State and the relationship between them."

The center has rooms named after Jack Riley, the head of Animal Science and Industry for 17 years; Calvin Drake, emeritus professor and former director of the Livestock and Meat Industry Council (LMIC); Pat Koons, president of LMIC when the Stout Center was built, the Kansas Livestock Association, and Richard and Walter Porter.

Though not a K-State graduate, Stout was a loyal friend and longtime supporter of K-State who enjoyed working with students.

"Stanley Stout threw his heart into helping other people," Porter said. "He was dedicated to helping others, and good things flow from that. For his entire life, he showed the highest loyalty to K-State, the cattle industry and his friends. Stanley left this earth much too soon, but his friends are returning the favor by naming this building in his honor."

Even though it's not broke, it may be time to fix it

By Josh Coltrain,
Crop Production Agent,
Wildcat Extension District

I'm afraid the most common variety of wheat planted in our area is PWWH. You are probably asking what variety this is, but it's actually the "Plant What We Have" variety. My background is in wheat genetics so I am a pretty firm believer in planting newer varieties when those varieties offer an advantage over older ones.

If varietal decisions have not been made, now is the time to do so. There are quite a few resources available from K-State Research and Extension that can assist in decision making. The first, Wheat Production Handbook (C529) is an older publication, but a good one. This is especially useful for farmers who don't have a ton of experience in growing wheat. One recommendation from the publication is to try newly released varieties every three or four years, which I believe is quite reasonable. The most planted wheat in our area (and even the state of Kansas) is Everest accounting for about 60% of the southeast Kansas acreage (14% statewide).

Interestingly enough, it was released to foundation and registered seed dealers in 2009 with seed being available for producers in 2010.

I found those statistics in the newly released 2014 Kansas Winter Wheat Performance Tests (SRP1108). Within this publication lies a multitude of information. Probably the most read portion of the publication is the yield trial data from 21 locations around the state. For southeast Kansas, the most applicable trials are the Parsons (both soft and hard wheat varieties) and Ottawa locations. I highly recommend using the multiyear averages (if available) which tend to give a more realistic idea of how the variety will perform. Also, I recommend ignoring the yields and paying attention to the percent of test average. For example, one of the newer wheat varieties that I expect to take over some acres in our area is Ruby Lee. At the Ottawa location, Ruby Lee yielded 98 bushels/acre and was 10 percent better than the test average. I hope producers would not expect the 98 bushel yield, but a 10 percent over average yield could be expected.

Diseases cause many headaches to wheat producers in southeast Kansas. While this is obviously not "breaking news" headline worthy, it still should be considered when making variety decisions. The K-State Research and Extension publication that has this covered is called Wheat Variety Disease and Insect Ratings 2014 (MF991). This publication gives a comprehensive rating for 60 hard red winter wheat varieties (and an additional ten white wheat varieties).

For southeast Kansas, producers should probably focus on the barley yellow dwarf, head scab, and Septoria tritici blotch ratings in addition to the old standbys of leaf and strip rust. The diseases are rated on a scale from 1 to 9 with 9 being the most susceptible to disease. One very useful section of the publication is the summary section where the varieties are broken down on an area of suitability (eastern/central Kansas versus western Kansas). For example, the variety Ruby Lee mentioned earlier is in the "Average" rating group and Everest is classified as "Above Average."

We are living in the Information Age, and utilizing available information is an important aspect of good management.

K-State prides itself as being an absolutely great source for wheat information and with these publications, producers can make the best management decision for their operation. If you have questions or would like more information, please call me at the office (620) 724-8233, or e-mail me at jcoltrain@ksu.edu, or visit the Wildcat Extension District website at www.wildcatdistrict.ksu.edu.
