

YouTube video features Osborne County farm wheat harvest

By Lucas Shivers

Sweeping panoramic scenes, diving camera angles from a drone and GoPros fixed to combine blades make a Kansas wheat harvest look like a Hollywood production.

Doug Armknecht created a video of harvest, posted on YouTube at https://youtu.be /oRVEaxZFH8I, of Osborne farming family Jhan and Marsha LaRosh, and their children Kenton, Kevin, Kelli and Kandi. The LaRosh operation includes cattle, soybeans and corn, along with the main part of the operation: more than 2,000 acres of wheat.

"I hope that anyone without a farming background can watch the video and understand the family farm a little more," Armknecht said. "And anyone with a farming background, hopefully it will touch them and remind them of everything that's good with farming."

Armknecht started filming the annual wheat harvest traditions in 2012, after marrying into the family in 2011.

"Kelli, my wife, suggested I use the handheld camcorder I had to take a few shots of harvest," Armknecht said. "Later I edited them together, and it was surprisingly good and fun to watch. Each year I've tried to make it just a little bit better."

Upgrading to a Sony Handycam camcorder for the 2013 harvest season, Armknecht continues to build a collection of hightech tools for filming.

"Last year, my father-inlaw purchased a drone to get aerial views," Armknecht said. "This year, I added a GoPro camera for machinemounted shots, and upgraded to a higher quality drone."

In the final editions of the videos, there is no narration yet the captivating videos highlight underlying themes of the LaRosh legacy: farming, faith, and family.

"I guess the images speak for themselves," he said. "You can see how much work harvest is, how beautiful Kansas can be, and how much of a family operation his 1959 John Deere 55 combine," he said. "They ran it back some good memories and made for great video!"

Passionate about a stellar finished product, Armknecht invests many hours into the project.

"I spent about 30-40 hours out in the field shooting, mostly in the evenings after my day job," he said. "That yielded 14 hours of raw footage. Editing took at least double the amount of time shooting."

As YouTube views hit more than 37,000 for the 2014 video, Armknecht and the family launched an event to premiere the new video, LaRosh Wheat Harvest 2015, at the Center Theatre in Smith Center. On Aug. 9, Armknecht showed all four 2015 in a 40-minute presentation to more than 125 peoquickly, but making a film that flows and tells a story takes a lot of time and thought," he said. "Then there are the finishing touches that make it look great, like color correction, stabilization, effects, sound mixing, and so on."

Since posting on YouTube and his own site, ksfarmimagery.com, less than 15 percent of those who have viewed his videos live in Kansas, showing the impact of the outreach and storytelling power.

"I've been surprised by how much interest the videos have generated," Armknecht said. "They were originally made for the family to enjoy. Since I posted them online. interest and views have grown every year."

Viewers often find connection to their own childhoods, farming backgrounds or links to the past in the harvest videos.

"I never would have thought that watching someone else's farming videos would have such an impact, but I guess it does," Armknecht said. "This year, I've heard from people surprised that the video is in Kansas. They didn't know the state had that kind of beauty! Then there was a funny comment from a guy who said his dog likes to bite tires like Rusty does in our video."

Armknecht said he feels honored to create a special way to commemorate the family tradition.

"It's been a blessing to be a part of the LaRosh family and their narvest, knecht said. "I feel like this year's video really pays tribute to the LaRosh family and the Kansas wheat harvest in general, and does so in a beautiful way.'

Armknecht used a drone to capture stunning aerial images during wheat harvest.

Feeding our youngsters

By John Schlageck, Kansas Farm Bureau

For many children summer vacation zoomed by too quickly and they're not excited about the new school vear that is about to begin. Others are looking forward to school starting so they have something to eat.

For a growing number of Kansas youngsters, summer isn't a carefree time. For them summer isn't fun in the sun, swimming at the pool, sports, picnics and vacation. Children who rely on free or reduced-fee lunches during the school year often struggle to find enough to eat during the summer.

Too many students do not eat regular meals when school is out of session. Some educators say they see a real learning gap at the start of the school year between students who had enough to eat during the summer break and the ones who struggled.

To address the serious needs of these Kansas children, the USDA, school districts, and several antipoverty groups partner to provide summer meals. But last year, about half of all the summer meal sites in the state were located in the four largest counties. Children living in 35 counties were not being served at all. Fifty percent of Kansas students qualified for free or reduced-price lunches in 2014, according to the Kansas State Department of Education. Each year, more students rely upon these nutritious meals throughout the school year.

Still, less than 7 percent of Kansas children who are eligible for these meals; take advantage of summer meal programs, according to the Food Research and Action Center. They rank Kansas 50th out of 50 states in terms of our summer meal outreach. So, what is the solution?

It's time to improve the way we feed these children during the summer months. There are more effective and efficient ways to provide students with the nutrition they need.

Kansas is considering a new approach to improve the way to feed students when school is out. Traveling miles from home each day to eat at a designated location requires a working vehicle and money for gas which aren't always available to low-income children in rural areas.

To address this problem, organizations are looking to home-delivered meals. Similar to what Meals on Wheels does for senior citizens. Another proposal could send children home with meals that could last them until their next visit.

Reauthorization of child nutrition programs in 2015 will also provide an opportunity to feed more students, no matter where they live. Lawmakers in Washington will consider this reauthorization of child nu-

As parents are sending their children off to another school year, I'm reminded of one of the more frivolous arguments I've heard against animal agriculture. "It's just so hard to see the baby animals taken away from their mothers. Somehow it just seems cruel."

Well, I've sent four children out the door and into the big old world, and believe me, there were plenty of tears shed by all. The first days of kindergarten, they were scared to death, and I was mourning the loss of my "babies." Then came the time to send them off to college and I was scared to death. If they were also scared, by then they were much too cool to show it. Both occasions - kindergarten and college - were times that, along with happiness and pride, brought a certain degree of pain and sorrow. Does that mean we shouldn't have done it? The very idea seems ludicrous. They weren't born to live in my house forever. They were born to learn, grow and mature and eventually leave to go make their own way in the world; not sit around on my couch playing video games and staring at their smart phones all day. Parents who prevent their children from growing up and leaving home would be considered irresponsible and possibly even abu-

Real life isn't always pretty - either in the animal world or the human sphere. The simple truth is, livestock are born to fulfill a purpose. And, while it might be a little hard for some people to accept, that purpose is to provide food and fiber for the humans inhabiting this planet. In wildlife, some animals are born to provide food for other animals. It doesn't mean they don't provide enjoyment in other ways - we all love seeing little bunnies scamper through the grass. Is the coyote that catches and eats it a cruel and heartless murderer? Of course not.

Last night was one of my two favorite sleeping nights of the year. Each year I look forward to the first night of the spring warm enough to leave the windows open and the first night in August when it is cool enough to shut off the air conditioner and purge the house. There is nothing more refreshing than a cool night breeze blowing in the window or the smell of the morning when you wake up. I know it is kind of corny but it is the simple things that make me happy.

With the cold front that came through, Jennifer and I made the strategic decision to shut the air conditioner off and open the windows. The long- term forecast called for a week of night-time temperatures in the low to mid-fifties and daytime temperatures in the mideighties. The decision to turn the air on is an agonizing one that we try to make as late as possible, often in mid to late-June. The decision to turn it off is a much easier one; usually sometime after school starts (after all, we don't need to run the air during the day when it is just Dad at home).

Night had come and the windows were open. I had my pillows arranged just right, the ten o'clock news on (for the weather of course) and a gentle, cool breeze was wafting through the curtains. This was going to be a good night and I was going to get a good sleep. I could hear the cicadas buzzing, the crickets chirping and a few night birds calling - all peaceful, relaxing sounds. Then it happened.

I have a Brittany bird dog named Jack. Jack refuses to stay in his kennel and will climb out if left in it. He is one of those goofy dogs who endear themselves to you with all of the stupid things they do. He also has proven that he will stay around, so he has been given the job of keeping the homestead safe. It must be noted that he mainly protects us from invading squirrels and unseen things in the night.

Jack has also developed a strong dislike of the neighborhood covotes and feels the need to answer them bark for howl. This often strikes an alarm with our three cow dogs, who do obediently stay in their kennels, and often the coyotes are answered with a quartet of canines. I am sure this discourages the covotes from raiding the sheep pens and keeps all other predators at bay also. Jack is such a loyal guard dog that he is willing to sacrifice a whole night's sleep to keep us safe.

So back to my much anticipated night of sleep with the window open. Just as I was about to drift off into a cool, refreshing night of slumber, the invasion began. Jack went tearing off of the deck and into the dark night after the howling covotes with a full baritone bark. This alerted the other three who backed him up from their kennels. Apparently the invading force of coyotes was advancing rapidly because Jack retreated as fast as he charged out.

His retreat led him directly to our bedroom window. I guess he is such a loyal dog that he was going to make his last stand protecting us from the coyotes. The coyotes must have been getting closer because his barking became louder and louder. To say the least, it was disturbing my sleep. At first I thought the coyotes would move on, Jack would go back to sleep and things would get better. Nope, after a while I decided to discuss the situation with Jack and try to convince him that the coyotes were just messing with him and things would be okay.

I think if Jack could talk that he would say I was a bit grumpy, especially to a loyal, dedicated guardian who was just trying to keep everyone and everything safe. Jack heeded my advice for five, maybe ten minutes but finally the gravity of the situation got the best of him and he started barking his warning to the covotes again. Maybe it was the relaxing nature of the cool breeze or more likely it was the hectic pace of the day, but I finally was able to ignore the barking and fell asleep. The next morning I woke up refreshed to find that the covotes had been kept at bay and the world, or at least the homestead, was safe. Jack, exhausted by an entire night of security, was asleep on the deck where the cool morning breeze could hit him. Maybe he wasn't such a dumb dog after all.

"They are called the opposite sex cause whatever you wanta do, they wanta do the opposite!"

Guest Editorial

By Governor Sam Brownback

Agriculture is more than an economic industry in Kansas; it is a way of life that relies on hard work, responsibility, and family. Growing up on a farm, I understood that success relied on hard work and commitment, values that we see every day in our farming and ranching communities. This week, I am traveling the state meeting with agricultural businesses to reaffirm our commitment to the success of this important industry. Farming is a source of growth and opportunity for Kansans.

Agriculture is the largest economic driver in Kansas, valued at more than $63 billion, accounting for 43 percent of the state's total economy. In Kansas, farmland accounts for 88.9 percent of all Kansas land, and more than 21 million acres in Kansas is harvested for crops while another 16 million are used for pastureland for grazing animals. Not only is Kansas a leader in beef cattle, wheat and sorghum, our state is one of the fastest-growing dairy regions in the United States, growing by 7.5 percent in 2014. Agriculture employs more than 229,000 Kansans.

Kansas farmers and ranchers are feeding the world, exporting nearly $4.9 billion in agricultural products like wheat, beef, soybeans, feeds and fodders, and corn. Not only is agriculture big business in Kansas, it's a family business as more than 86 percent of Kansas farms and ranches are family-owned.

Ensuring the future strength of Kansas agriculture requires us to provide the support that allows Kansas farmers to succeed while encouraging more farming and agriculture businesses to expand or relocate to Kansas. Towards this end, I signed into law legislation that better connects famers to the market, creates voluntary, locallydriven and flexible water conservation tools, and created a 50-year vision for Kansas water resources.

At its core, conservation is a conservative value as we act as good stewards of the valuable resources with which Kansas is blessed. We will continue to protect the rights of Kansans by fighting the federal government's efforts to infringe on our state's water and private property rights. And we will continue to work with our partners at the state and local level, providing voluntary, flexible tools to help farmers and ranchers conserve resources. Any longterm vision for Kansas' water resources will only be successful if we recognize that a one-size-fits-all federal policy does not work. Today, the Kansas Department of Agriculture, Kansas Water Office, Kansas Water Authority, Department of Health and Environment, Department of Wildlife, Parks, and Tourism, and the Governor's Council of Economic Advisors, are partnering to preserve our precious water resources in

The values of Kansas agriculture make our state stronger. Family, hard work, community, and concern for the future inspire all of us to build a brighter future for Kansas. Together, we will continue the success of this important industry and ensure more opportunity and hope for future generations.

Kansas for years to come.

The FDA released its 2012-2013 National Antimicrobial Resistance Monitoring System Integrated Report that highlights antimicrobial resistance patterns in bacteria isolated from humans, retail meats and animals at slaughter. who choose not to eat meat because of deeply held personal convictions. I don't have a problem with that - it's their prerogative. But they must understand that most people don't make that choice, and so depend on the products provided by animal agriculture. Our job is to practice good animal husbandry and make sure those animals are taken care of to the best of our abilities as long as they are in our custody. All along the supply chain, people are aware of the need to treat the animals humanely up until the very last second of their life.

We won't convince those on the fringe of the merits of animal agriculture. But it's imperative that we communicate with those more on the fence that what we do is important, because a hungry world depends on us. At every opportunity we must demonstrate our commitment to the animals in our care and hold anyone accountable who mistreats livestock. We just can't forget that we are always under scrutiny; but what we do even when we think no one is watching is even more important. It's called integrity. And only when we practice that can we truly look our detractors square in the eye and say, "Yes, I am involved in animal agriculture. Let me tell vou more about it..."

As vacations come to an end and summer winds down, many of us see our schedules gearing up. It's not an easy task getting everyone up and out of the house---on time—after weeks of more laid-back living. It's helpful if parents begin following a more rigid bedtime schedule prior to school starting. Another suggestion parents might want to try is to have your children make a list of everything that needs to be done prior to leaving the house in the morning. Examples of items on the list include: Brush teeth, make bed, feed dog, etc. Have the child post the list in a spot where he/she will readily see it.

The following tried and true 'tricks' have been compiled by the University of Delaware Extension Service. Maybe one or two will help your household run more smoothly in the morn-

* Does each person have his/her own alarm (or cell phone) to set to get up in the morning? Show younger children how to set it and make sure older children, if they're inclined to use the snooze feature, plan their time accordingly. Having their own alarm gives youth added responsibility that, many times, they're ready

* It helps if parent(s) get up at least ½ hour ahead of the rest of the family. This enables them not only to use limited facilities but can generally set the mood for the household.

* When planning wakeup times, consider the amount of time each person spends in the bathroom. It may be necessary to stagger wake-up times if there is only one bathroom. And/or some family members may need to shower at night while others shower in the morning.

Begin playing loud cheerful music about 10 minutes after the last alarm should have gone off * Check that all needed supplies like toothpaste, soap, combs, washcloths, etc. are available where even the youngest student can reach them and take care of their own needs.

* Do whatever you can the night before. This could include: setting out clothes, preparing lunches, signing necessary papers, placing breakfast items on the table (i.e. cereal boxes, bowls, toaster, loaf of bread), loading backpacks, etc.

* Have a 'launching pad' by the door where items that need to go to school or work can be placed and be ready to grab before walking out the door.

Strong families have found establishing some sort of 'farewell ritual' between parents and children to be very affirming for the family unit. This could take the form of hugs, high 5's, 'code words', etc. (Examples of this would be the parent using the child's pet name, or phrases such as "see you later alligator" with the child replying "after awhile crocodile".) This farewell ritual creates a bond between the parent and child as well as sets a positive mood for the day.

Organized Shopping Lists Save Time, Money

By Martha Murphy, Wildcat District Extension Agent, Pittsburg EFNEP office

Are you looking for an easy way to save $1,000 or more a year? Use an organized shopping list! Why? The average shopper spends 40 percent more on impulse purchases when shopping without a list. If you spend $50 each week at the grocery store, there's a good chance that $20 of those purchases are unplanned. That adds up! You're also likely to spend 50 cents more for every minute you are at the grocery store beyond the first 30 minutes. In this case, time is money! Save your time and your money by using an organized shop-

Use a "Master" Shopping List. It's easy!

- The easiest way is to use the major food groups (vegetables, fruits, grains, dairy products and protein) and an "other foods" as the headings on your master shopping list. It's pretty easy to set up a spreadsheet or you can use some of the really great editable templates found at www.grocery lists.org/ultimatest/
- · Another way is to set up your list to follow the layout of your favorite store. Find out if your store has an online or printed store layout/guide for you. If not, you might have it memorized or go to the store and do a walk through and write down the sections.
- Write any food items that you purchase every week (for example, bread and milk) under the proper heading on your master list. Photocopy the master list, or print it from a computer, for use as a weekly shopping list.
- Keep your weekly shopping list in a central location. Ask family members to add to it as needed, to avoid running out of items and return trips to the store.

Plan on Sales

- Check out the weekly grocery ads to see what items are on sale, especially the meat and produce sales. Base your weekly menu around these special deals. For example, if the grocery store is selling tuna at a lower-than-usual price, you might decide to serve tuna casserole and tuna salad sandwiches that week.
- Check your kitchen to make sure you have the rest of the ingredients you need to complete the recipe, and add any necessary items to your list.

In & Out Quickly

• Plan to shop during the least busy times. Weekdays or early morning tend to be less crowded, which lets you get in and out of the store quickly.

Now, preserving food can be easier than many people realize, and vinegar is a key ingredient. For example, "refrigerator pickling" (also known as "quick pickles") takes just four simple ingredients and three easy steps. It's a fun way to enjoy local or organic vegetables, particularly if you have a small amount of produce to preserve. Enjoy as side dishes for entrées, condiments for your special cocktail or for your favorite snack; share them with family and friends at your next picnic or take some along as a delicious hostess gift.

- 1 cup water ½ cup sugar
- 1 tablespoon kosher salt

For variety, add ingredients such as fresh herbs, red pepper flakes, mustard seed, cumin seed, peppercorns, cloves of garlic, or any other pickling spice.

Select, clean and prepare all vegetables. You can blanch them in boiling water, steam them lightly or roast them beforehand. The key is to start with crunchy vegetables. Pack all the vegetables tightly into containers with airtight lids. You can also combine more than one vegetable in the same jar if you want variety. Just week and I couldn't be happier. Not only is September my birth month, but it also signals the beginning of fall and the wonderful community festivals that go with it. I admit a summer spent darting from my air-conditioned house to my air-conditioned car has left me feeling a bit of a shut-in and with a touch of the blues.

Of course, the blues isn't always a bad thing. It can be a good thing, especially when we're talking about the musical genre, the Blues. And there is no better place to enjoy some of those blues than at one of my favorite festivals, the Paxico Blues Festival, which will be Saturday, September 19 this year.

This festival turns the main streets of Paxico into a rockin', laid back day of live music, local eats and good community fun. It features some of the country's best blues musicians. This year's headliner is Anthony Gomes, who Billboard Magazine named the Number One Blues Artist. The full day of music begins at 11 a.m. with four other top-notch musicians also performing. (You can check out the line up at www.paxicomerchants.com/ bluesfest.)

After a long, hot summer there is nothing like some live music to help me get my feet tapping. The Blues Festival is billed as "Big city Blues in a small town setting" and the best part may be that it's free. Well, it's difficult to label any part of this festival as the best part because it's so jam-packed with fun stuff. In addition to the world-class Blues there are some great area food vendors on site. This year Puffy's Steakhouse will be joined by Oz Highland Farms, and Southern Star with their "Better Than Yer Momma's BBQ". The Longbranch Saloon will also be open and serving up pulled pork and sides.

You are also welcome to bring your own coolers filled with favorite snacks and beverages. If people watching, eating good food and grooving to some live music isn't enough for you, then stretch your legs by checking out the town's antique stores, many of which will be running specials for the day.

This is only one of fun fall festivals planned all over the area during the next couple of months, so if you too are feeling like you too have a case of the Summertime Blues, get out and support local communities and the festivals they host.

It may be called the Blues, but it can make you feel so good!

tian culture. Prophets can be found around the globe, often arising in times of stress such as warfare, plagues, or disruptive societal changes.

Native American culture, being spiritual in nature, traditionally produced its own brand of prophet. Spiritual leaders were ever present among tribal people standing between the natural world and the spirit world

Among the Kickapoo people the prophet Kaanna-kuk changed the course of history for his people. He is known in most historical accounts as Kennekuk, however, at a treaty signing in St. Louis, dated October 24, 1832, he plainly wrote Ka-anna-kuk.

Two Kickapoo bands remained in Illinois following an earlier treaty. No two groups could have been more contradictory. The 'Vermilion Band" had successfully adopted the agrarian lifestyle of the advancing Anglo culture and professed its own form of Christianity. The other band was led by Masheena, a war leader who had commanded a company of Kickapoo warriors in the 1811 Battle of Tippecanoe against settlers in Indiana. Masheena's followers were definitely not interested in giving up hunting and war for a life of digging in the dirt.

Prominent among the Vermilion Kickapoos was Ka-anna-kuk, "a tall, bony Indian, with keen black eye, and (a) face beaming with intelligence." Ka-anna-kuk is believed to have been born in the Illinois "Salt Lands" in the year 1797. Little is known of his parents except that his father was alcoholic. As a young man Ka-anna-kuk was known as Kanekaka, "the Drunkard's Son." In those days he was most certainly influenced by his own culture. The Shawnee Prophet Tenkawaka was well known to the Illinois tribes. Tenkawaka followed even earlier prophets who encouraged "sloughing off" the white man's evil ways and promoting a return to the old ways. Outside influences included Roman Catholic traders who brought knowledge of Christianity followed Methodist missionaries bringing official creed to the Kickapoos. Ka-anna-kuk was converted to Methodism in the early 1820s. Soon after his conversion Ka-anna-kuk devoted himself to removing the destructive influence of alcohol among his people. He and like-minded friends patrolled the roads leading from the frontier towns to their Kickapoo village. All Indians were searched and any whiskey found was confiscated and poured out on the ground.

Ka-anna-kuk was a natural leader. He began to preach to the Methodist congregation and soon gained a loyal following. His teachings centered on walking the straight and narrow path. The "broad way" of "professional drunkards, tattlers, liars and meddling bodies" was to be forsaken.

As his influence grew, Ka-anna-kuk's teachings evolved and grew beyond traditional doctrine. Congregational worship continued daily, lasting from one to three hours. Prayer sticks based on earlier tribal implements displayed a number of carved characters. Followers placed their fingers on each character as they chanted or sang.

"Regulators" freely used rods to keep order during Ka-anna-kuk services. taught divine stewardship of the land and the belief that the Kickapoo people should live in peace with their neighbors. Anyone who strayed from Ka-anna-kuk's version of the straight and narrow path was publicly whipped "on their bare back until the blood ran freely." Following the punishment the penitents, "would shake hands with the 'executioners,' thank them for the favor done, and express relief that a heavy burden had been lifted.'

Increasingly Ka-annakuk cast himself as a man who enjoyed direct communication with the Great Spirit. In time followers and skeptics alike referred to him as "The Prophet." Although not a chief, Ka-annakuk became the principal spokesman for the tribe.

Under increased pressure to give up their ancestral lands in Illinois, Kaanna-kuk negotiated the terms of the eventual move to a reservation just west of Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. With peaceful intent and successful agricultural pursuit, Ka-anna-kuk's people were presented to other tribes as the ideal example of how to live on the reservation. With that endorsement Ka-anna-kuk spoke to and influenced, other tribes especially the Pottawatomie. The two tribes became closely associated and signed a special agreement of friendship in 1851.

Early in 1852 a smallpox epidemic "carried off" fifty Pottawatomies and spread to the Kickapoos and Delawares. Ka-anna-kuk contracted the disease and as death drew near he announced that in three days he would "rise again."

However, in death Ka-anna-kuk had met his match. Three days passed before his moldering body was buried under the prairie sod, and the life of the Kickapoo Prophet became one more legendary story to be told on The Way West

Must see, family-oriented fun at the 2015 Kansas State Fair

thing going on at the Fair, so there are always memories to make," says longtime fairgoer Tony Smith. Smith, from Sterling, makes planning the trip for his family of ten to the Fairgrounds appear seamless. He's a natural, as he's been attending the Fair since he was only three years old. His oldest memory was riding Fair rides in the kids' area. Now, years later, he's bringing his wife and children to do the same and create lasting memories together as a fam-

Another loyal attendee, Marsha Parr, from Johnson County, joins anywhere from 7-15 family members for Fair festivities each year. "You experience things at the Kansas State Fair that you couldn't experience anywhere else. And it's all in one place."

"Having a family of ten, we've become pretty good at working around everyone's schedules," Smith explains. When planning the trip to the fair each year, "It's a long-range plan, but we try to firm everything up a couple weeks in advance."

Parr agrees, as she notes her goal is to have all Kansas State Fair plans complete by the time kids start school in August. "With so many opportunities to buy tickets in advance for gate admission, meals and entertainment, it makes planning the trip so much more enjoyable and less stressful."

The Smith family takes advantage of Dillon's Dollar Day (Monday, Sept. 14), and this year they are especially excited to participate in Ride-O-Rama, a Midway promotion in which wristbands are $25 each for rides. The wristband Midway specials are valid on Sept. 11, 15, 16, 17, 18 and 20 (promotional hours dependent on date). Other cost-effective ways the Smith family enjoys the Fair are visiting the petting zoo and craft areas, watching the free stage acts, going to the Pig Races and checking out the agriculture and art exhibits.

Contrary to popular belief, there are a lot of activities everyone can do without having to spend money after entering the Fairgrounds. Both the Smith and Parr families organize their trips to appeal to children of various ages. The Smith family must-see at the Fair? The Birthing Center. It was the first place they went with their children to see the baby calves, ewes, piglets and all the activity in the area. The amount of knowledge kids can absorb at the Fair is incredible, and the Birthing Center provides an enjoyable atmosphere while educating children at the same time

"The Kansas State Fair is the highlight of our kids' year," Parr says. "Plus it's educational and provides them with experiences they wouldn't have at school."

While one might think it would be difficult to plan meals for a family of ten at the Fairgrounds, the Smith family, yet again, executes this portion of their trip with ease. "The neat thing about meals at the Fair is the amount of food we receive," says Smith, "We can have our younger kids pair up and pick their favorite entree to share, and it works out great." Without wasting any food, they still manage to have a wonderful meal that pleases everyone's palette.

In addition, the Kansas State Fair offers Kids Club, Couples and Family packs providing fair-goers additional savings opportuni-

"With our large family, it would be difficult to find a place where we can stay for three or four days that everyone can find something to do without it being too expensive," Parr says, "The Fair provides all of this and more."

Be sure to mark your calendar for a trip to the Kansas State Fair, September 11-20 in Hutchinson. The Kansas State Fair truly provides an unmatched stay and play opportunity with entertainment, education, food and fun.

Improving and enhancing stockwater availability will be highlighted at the final 2015 KLA/Kansas State University Ranch Management Field Day August 29 at LS Cattle near Lecompton. The commercial cow-calf operation is owned and operated by Bryce and Gina Schumann and their children, Wyatt, Dylan, Jessye and Kassidy.

The field day site is home to a water development project the Schumanns implemented to improve their source of stockwater and establish additional watering sites. Former Douglas County Conservation District manager Jim Weaver assisted in the development of the project and will explain to attendees how it was built and how it provides more flexibility for supplying quality water for cows in a rotational grazing program. Using DNA testing for identifying desirable and profitable traits is now readily available for livestock producers and, according to K-State Cow-Calf Extension specialist Bob Weaber, may be a valuable tool when selecting breeding stock. Weaber will provide attendees with strategies on how to effectively use this technology in a commercial cow-calf operation.

Another topic on the agenda will address frequently asked questions on building quality fences and Kansas fence laws. Noel Montgomery, owner of Mont-Fencing gomerv near Holton, will provide tips on designing and constructing long-lasting fences in northeast Kansas. KLA vice president of Legal and Government Affairs Aaron Popelka will be on hand to address questions regarding livestock owners' liability exposure and how current regulations and court decisions govern Kansas fence law.

The field day at LS Cattle will begin with registration at 9:00 a.m. and conclude with a free beef lunch at noon. All livestock producers and others involved in the business are invited to attend.

The ranch is located in western Douglas County. If traveling from the west, go east 1 mile from the United Brethren Church in Big Springs on Highway 40 to the Highway 40/E 200 Road intersection. A blue RWD 3 water tower is located at the southeast corner of this in-

A true western pioneer, Billie Jean Shepperson Beaton, saw the country go from the open ranges to livestock being fenced in to keep them restricted to the landowner's property or leased land. She grew up on the vast, lonely plains and mountains of central Wyoming. Born in 1919, Billie Jean was raised around Salt Creek and Midwest, Wyoming and attended school in those towns. She loved the open country and was soon working livestock with her many horses.

During the depression, she was able to buy colts for 25 cents each and she bought many of them. She broke and trained the colts and started working at the stockyards as a youngster. The Salt Creek stockyards were located on the railroad and it became her favorite place to hang out. She had lots of horses and her help was always welcome by the ranchers who brought their stock in to ship.

Ranchers from all over Johnson, Campbell and Natrona counties would trail their sheep, cattle and horses to the stockyards. Billie Jean would always know where the good grass was so the ranchers could graze and rest their stock before shipping.

She would ride out to meet herds coming in to the stockyards and help trail them to the railroad where she would help work and load them onto the trains.

During high school, Billie Jean and a friend spent summers helping a stock contractor trail livestock from north of Midwest to Alcova and Mills, Wyoming to put on rodeos. It was open range at that time so they had to herd the animals as they traveled more than 70

There were no corrals, rodeo arenas or facilities so they also had to ride herd while they were there. When she and her friend wanted to go to a dance, they had to go horseback, sometimes riding 25 to 30 miles to the dance.

Billie Jean graduated from Midwest High School in 1935 and attended Colorado Teachers College in Greeley, Colorado. She bought her first cattle and the diamond heart brand in

In 1938, she married Frank L. Shepperson in Ft. Collins, Colorado. They ranched on Castle Creek near his parents, just south of Midwest, Wyoming, raising cattle and horses. They lived in a sheep wagon and later lived in a tarpaper homestead shack before moving an oilfield house onto the ranch. There was no electricity or running water. They had no chutes or corrals. To brand the cattle, they headed and heeled them. She became an expert roper in order to catch and work the cattle. They also. built reservoirs with horses. When they were ready to ship the cattle, they trailed them to the railroad at Bucknum or Bishop to ship in the fall. In the 1940's and 50's, the young Shepperson family became heavily involved in rodeo. Frank bulldogged in local rodeos and traveled a few years participating at Madison Square Garden and other legendary rodeo venues. Billie Jean loved participating also and later, she would take great joy in watching her children and grandchildren carry on an impressive legacy of rodeo successes. She loved all school sports, especially when the family was partici-

She was instrumental in starting the barrel racing event in the 1950s at the Women's Rodeo in Casper. She had seen the event at bigger rodeos in other states. She competed for many years and always had a horse in training.

Billie Jean later finished her college education at the University of Wyoming in 1961 and taught at the Midwest Schools for 20 years. Frank passed away in 1969 and she later married longtime friend and neighbor, Johnny Beaton, in 1972. They ran Black Angus cattle and some sheep on the Teapot Ranch. Johnny passed away in 2004. She continued to be involved on the ranch with brandings, were stranded and cattle became immobilized in the high snow drifts. An emergency was declared and an airlift of supplies for isolated ranches and bales of hay for stranded livestock was implemented. In "Operation Haylift." U.S. Air Force pilots in C-47 'Skytrains', C-45 'Expeditors' and C-82 'Flying Boxcars' airlifted countless tons of hay to stranded herds of cattle and flocks of sheep throughout the region. Billie Jean's vast knowledge of the country was called upon to fly in the airlift, directing pilots where to drop the supplies to ranchers and hay to starving livestock.

> Wall outlaw hideout. In 2008 the Shepperson Ranch and Teapot Ranch were both awarded the Centenial Ranch awards for ranching in Wyoming over 100 years. Billie Jean was part of both of these awards. The Wyoming Cowboy Hall of Fame was founded in 2013. Their chief goal is "To preserve, promote, perpetuate, publish and document Wyoming's rich working cowboy and ranching history through researching, profiling and honoring individuals who broke the first trails and introduced that culture to the state."

Billie Jean passed away in February of 2014. She left an honored legacy to be chosen in the first class of inductees of the Wyoming Cowboy Hall of Fame. Billie Jean has surely become a Wyoming Cowgirl Legend.

'International Year of Soils' celebration planned in Manhattan Sept. 27

In the hustle and bustle year and essential natural of our daily lives, we likely don't consider that below us lies one of the essential components for life to exist. Soil, along with water, air and sunlight, are necessary to sustain life on earth.

Without those four, there simply would not be any food grown, said Gary Pierzynski, university distinguished professor and head of the Department of Agronomy at Kansas State University.

"The quality of the soil influences productivity, or the amount of life that does exist," Pierzynski said. "Productive soils allow us to sustain the population of life that we have, not only humans, but all organisms in the environment."

In celebration of soil, the United Nations declared 2015 the "International Year of Soils." K-State will host an event—with a program, displays and reception—on Sunday, Sept. 27 at the Hilton Garden Inn, Manhattan, recognizing this special the United States and 33 resource. The event, free and open to the public, will kick off the 12th International Phytotechnologies Conference that will take place through Sept. 30.

According to the International Phytotechnology Society, phytotechnology is the strategic use of plants to solve environmental problems. This is done through remediating contaminated sites and improving the quality of our natural resources, including soil, and restoring ecosystems in managed landscapes.

"We plan to have a comprehensive conference with papers on all aspects of phytotechnology as they relate to this year's conference theme, 'Phytotechnologies for Sustainable Development," said Larry Erickson, K-State professor of chemical engineering and director of the Center for Hazardous Substance Research. "We expect to have professionals from many parts of other countries at the conference.

Many areas of study will be represented at the conference, from agriculture to engineering to environmental science and beyond. Erickson, the conference chair, said the International Year of Soils celebration will begin at 4 p.m. with presentations, followed by a panel discussion and reception. Displays will be available to view throughout the afternoon. The program will wrap up at 7:30 p.m.

Draft program for the event

Pierzynski will speak on the International Year of Charles Rice, university distinguished professor of soil microbiology at Kansas State University, will present on the Food and Agriculture Organization's Global Soil Partnership.

U.S. Sen. Jerry Moran plans to attend and speak briefly.

Ravi Naidu, director of the Cooperative Research Centre for Contamination Assessment and Remediation of the Environment and University of Newcastle, Australia, will speak on soils, soil health and soil quality, in a presentation titled "Wonders of Soils: International Perspectives."

Kansas State University Provost April Mason will elaborate on current world food issues.

John Floros, dean of the K-State College of Agriculture and director of K-State Research and Extension, will present on the university's international programs related to soil, food and agriculture.

A panel discussion and question-and-answer period among presenters and other panelists will conclude the presentations portion of the event, followed by displays and an opening reception.

Kansas State Fair Announces State Fair Museum 2015 Exhibit - The Year of the Ride!

The Kansas State Fair has been known as a place where "A Wild Ride" is guaranteed. It's not surprising that in celebration of Ye Old Mill's 100th birthday, the 2015 Kansas State Fair Museum's exhibit will be "The Year Of The Ride."

"It is a perfect theme" says State Fair Museum director Charlotte Summers. "There is so much history and great stories about Ye Old Mill, Royal American Shows, and the other featured fair rides." Summers and the museum volunteers are busy collecting and identifying artifacts. If anyone is willing to loan or donate information or artifacts for the display, contact the Kansas State Fair info@kansasstatefair.com or 620-669-3600

The Kansas State Fair Museum, located in the Lair White House, opened in 2014 with the inaugural exhibit dedicated to J.B. Holdren, "Bardo the Clown." Even though it is the "Year of the Ride," Holdren's work, as it relates to the rides, will be featured. Additional museum items will include a Ye Old Mill original boat, vintage photos, history of the carousel horse and much more. The State Fair Museum will be open during the Fair and admission to the museum is free.

ear rots: it ain't easy being green

By Josh Coltrain, Crop Production Agent.

Wildcat Extension District Dwight D. Eisenhower said "Farming looks mighty easy when your plow is a pencil and you're a thousand miles from a corn field." As we near harvesting those corn fields, some of the concerns that make farming not so easy are ear rots. Though one (Aspergillus) tends to get the headlines, there are three others that can cause concerns as well.

Aspergillus is probably the most important disease of corn in our area. It is caused by the fungus Aspergillus flavus and the physical damage to the kernel, while quite unsightly, is not the main concern. Aspergillus colonies produce a mycotoxin called aflatoxin which is the main problem associated with this fungus. Aflatoxin impacts the marketability and quality of the grain especially if intended for livestock consumption. Aspergillus appears as a powdery olive green mold usually observed near the tip of the ear. The disease prevails in hot, dry years during the grain fill period and insect damaged or stressed plants are more susceptible.

While none of the other three ear rots get the attention of Aspergillus, they can be present in our fields. Gibberella ear rot is one of those potential ear rots. Even though it is not quite as important, it can produce a mycotoxin called deoxynivalenol (or DON) which is also called vomitoxin. This should sound familiar as it is the same toxin that was such an issue in our wheat crop this year. It produces the same toxin because it is caused by the same fungus: Gibberella zeae (which is called Fusarium graminearum in wheat). Gibberella appears as a pink to reddish mold that begins at the tip and moves down the ear. The disease is most prevalent when fields are planted following corn or wheat.

Another one of the possible ear rots is Diplodia which is caused by the fungus Stenocarpella maydis. The disease appears as a white or greyish mold on infected ears. The infection, which is most prevalent when wet weather coincides with silking, usually begins at the base of the ear and progresses toward the tip. Additionally, black specks that are actually pycnidia, the spore producing part of the fungus, appear on the husks, cobs, and kernel sides. While Diplodia doesn't produce toxins, the physical damage it causes lowers the test weight. Additionally, the infected kernels may induce a dockage from the grain purchaser. Diplodia is most common in continuous corn operations.

The final common ear rot for our area is Fusarium which is caused by the fungus Fusarium verticilloides. Once again, this infection can cause a mycotoxin called fumonisin which can impact the end use of the crop. Fumonisin is actually most worrisome if fed in swine or equine operations.

The fungus can be identified by a white fungal growth on the kernels as well as the starburst effect on random individual or small groups of kernels. The disease is most common in continuous corn operations and is most prevalent when damage has been caused by insects.

One common theme that should stand out is rotation is highly recommended. While farming may not be that easy, as Tom Hanks' character in A League of Their Own said, "If it were easy, everyone would do it." Hopefully producers have avoided these fungi this season and everyone has a safe harvest. State University nematologist.

Scientists at a recent meeting of Midwestern plant nematologists reported that they had observed a steady decrease in effectiveness of PI 88788 resistance against the soybean cyst nematode.

"This is becoming a serious concern for Kansas soybean producers," said Tim Todd, research nematologist in K-State's Department of Plant Pathology.

PI 88788 is a common source of genetic resistance to the soybean cyst nematode (SCN) that was introduced into many soybean varieties to counter the pest. The nematodes cost U.S. soybean producers more than $1 billion each year in lost yields, according to some estimates, Todd said. Every major soybeangrowing county in Kansas is infested this year.

The availability of alternative sources of resistance are currently limited. "Kansas soybean farmers desperately need additional sources of resistance against this widespread pest," Todd said.

Todd was one of a group of nematologists from eight Midwestern states and Ontario that discussed the development at a July 7-9 meeting of the North Central Committee on Practical Management of Nematodes on Corn. Sovbeans and Other Crops of Regional Importance in Chaska, Minnesota. The committee reviews and coordinates ongoing research on managing nematode parasites of crops, with special emphasis on corn and soybeans.

The scientists concluded that a coordinated approach using multiple management options, such as alternating soybeans with non-host crops, planting SCN-resistant sovbean varieties and using nematodeprotectant seed treatments, provides the greatest likelihood of sustained success for producing soybeans profitably in SCN-infested fields.

They also planned coordinated research projects for upcoming years, including work on nematode-resistant varieties, non-host crops, seed treatments, new nematode detection methods and soil health.

Chisholm Trail 150th anniversary kickoff event planned

Trail, Rails and Tales, the Spirit of the Chisholm Trail has been chosen as the theme of the kickoff event planned in Abilene next year to promote and honor the sesquicentennial of the Chisholm Trail in 2017. The event will be on Labor Day weekend, Sept. 2-3, 2016.

The trail, made famous through stories, movies and song, was used by Texas cattle ranchers to drive their herds north to the railroad in Abilene where the cattle could be sold and shipped east. The first shipment of Texas longhorns left Abilene via rail on Sept. 5, 1867.

The states of Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas, through which the cattle were driven, will mark the 150th anniversary of the Chisholm Trail throughout 2017 with numerous special events.

The Trail, Rails and Tales celebration will be the first of a number of Abilene events focusing on the town's role as the first railhead at the end of the Chisholm Trail.

"Just like family style dining, the Trail, Rails and Tales, Spirit of the Chisholm Trail event here in Abilene plans to offer a menu of whole family to come to Abilene for some Chisholm Trail history," says Deb Sanders, kickoff event chairwoman. "Drive your family 'herd' to Abilene and experience the longhorn cattle being loaded onto a cattle car and carried out of town by a steam locomotive; heck, you can even ride the same train as the longhorns. Cowboy poets, historic reenactors, can-can girls, a chuckwagon cook-off, and a buckaroo camp for the younger cowboys and cowgirls are just the tip of the tale! So herd your family into Abilene in September of 2016 for an Old West Ex-

Sanders says a book, All Along the Chisholm Trail, 1867-1889 by James W. Parker, gives the account of the Sept. 5, 1867 celebration in Abilene when the first shipment of longhorns headed east and was inspiration for the kick-off celebration planned for next year. "The first herd using the new Chisholm Trail consisted of 2,400 longhorns that started out from San Antonio, Texas and reached Abilene, Kansas in 1867," Parker writes in the book, "When the first shipment of Texas events that will tantalize the cattle left Abilene by railroad for Chicago, the event was celebrated in festive tents with feasting, wine, speeches and song. The new trail worked. And so the Chisholm Trail began."

The committee planning the Trail, Rails and Tales, the Spirit of the Chisholm Trail event toured sites related to the trail on a recent Sunday

"The large group was able to tour the Chisholm Trail sites together thanks to Mary Jane Oard of the Abilene and Smoky Valley Railroad that provided the bus driven by Joe Minick," Sanders says.

Michael Hook, Abilene historian, narrated the tour that included the town's early history along Texas Street, where marshals Wild Bill Hickok and Tom Smith kept order in saloons filled with rowdy cowboys fresh off the trail and the likes of outlaws Jesse James and John Wesley Hardin.

"To make the Texans feel at home in the North, they named the saloons and gambling halls after Texas and cattle names," Hook says. "The Alamo, the Lone Star, Bull's Head, Longhorn, the Trail, Old Fruit, Elkhorn and the Pearl were among the legendary saloons."

Hook also pointed out the former site of T.C. McInernev's Drovers Boot Store where he said the first pointed-toe, high-heeled cowboy boot was invented. Hook discovered a McInerney boot advertisement in the Abilene Chronicle newspaper dated 1871, four years before an Olathe company was given credit for the invention, he adds.

Other highlights of the tour included the site of the Drovers Cottage and Great Western Stockyards in Abilene, Smoky Hill River crossing, and Elm Springs near Carlton where a waterfall offered the trail-dusty cowboys the opportunity to bathe before entering Abilene.

Sharon and Don Meyer of Trail Boss Chuckwagon served dinner from their chuckwagon on the property of Jerry and Pam Unruh near Durham, where ruts from cattle drives still can be seen. Gary and Margaret Kraisinger, the authors of two books on the Western Cattle Trail, spoke about the life of the cowboy on the

During the tour, Ron Wilson, cowboy poet lariat, shared his poem about the Chisholm Trail and others he has written.

The Kansas Soybean Commission reappointed its two members-at-large for another three-year term and elected its 2015-2016 officers during its fall meeting, Aug. 13 in Topeka.

Jerry Jeschke, Robinson, and Lance Rezac, Onaga, will continue as commissioners-at-large. Their term coincides with that of Kurt Maurath, Oakley, who the soybean farmers in districts 1, 2 and 3 re-elected in March to represent them.

The commissioners also conducted their annual officer elections. Dennis Gruenbacher, Andale, will serve as chairman, with Lance Rezac, Onaga, as vice chairman. Maurath was reelected secretary and James Zwonitzer, Horton, treasur-

National Finals Rodeo in 1988 when Leo Camarillo and partner roped their steer in five seconds flat. It ranked in my mind with John Alden pitoning up Plymouth Rock or Neil Armstrong making angels in the moon dust! I was there when history was being made. It didn't matter that Leo's time only took third in the goround. I have watched team roping evolve. Thirty years ago it was called team tying.

In team tying both the header and the heeler were tied hard and fast. The header roped the horns and rode off to the west. The heeler would rope the hind

I happened to be at the legs, fall back to his left and head south. They'd form a "V" with the steer at the northernmost point. The steer would flop to the ground then the header would leap off, brandishing a piggin' string and tie the steer's heels with a square knot... Time!

Ron said Vern had come from Squaw Gap to the ropin' north of Medora, N.D. He entered up in the team tying. When his turn came he and his partner bailed outta the box and built to the steer. Halfway across the arena Vern cast his loop. Now it should be noted for followers of modern rodeo. neither Vern nor his horse, Whittier, were professional cowboys, they just did it for a living! Both right off the ranch, where they'd be back on duty the next morning.

His rope sailed out and settled round the steer's horns. Vern turned the corner and the slack snapped outta the line like a barkin' dog hittin' the end of the chain!

Then...his good ol' pony stuck his nose in the dirt and commenced to bawl and pitch. Tipparary had nothin' on him. He wallowed across the arena and up the grandstand fence, boggin' and firin', bellerin' and buckin', generally throwin' a fit and draggin' that steer behind him! Vern sat tall in the saddle, solid as Teddy Roosevelt crossin' the Little Missouri. He looked good. 'Course the rope runnin' from the saddle horn across his right leg held him tighter'n rubber horn wrap. The crowd cheered as he made the ride of the day!

At the northwest corner of the arena his horse took a hard right. The rope came slack as the steer caught up. Vern saw his chance, made a beautiful flying dismount and lit square on his feet! The horse bucked by on his left. Vern was just rearin' back to sail his hat in the air when the steer, still connected to the horse by a forty-foot rope, thundered by on his right! His double back flip scored 5 nines and a ten, with a difficulty rating of 2.5. BenGay immediately signed him for endorsements.

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crotts

The cattle on feed report was a little bit friendly. The on feed estimate of 103% came in as expected, but the placements at 99% was the lowest for July since 1992. The weights favored cattle in the 800 lbs. and up category, which means there will be fewer cattle available for slaughter after the first of the year.

The cattle futures didn't do well last week with losses in both the live cattle and feeder cattle contracts. The feeders even closed limit lower on Friday, which sets a very negative tone for this week. The charts look bearish after last week's losses, but from a fundamental standpoint it seems that most of the negativity came from the losses in the stock market and not the actual cattle market. There is a great deal of concern, at least at the moment, about the Chinese and world economies. Look for support in the December contract at the $141-$142 area.

The grains were mixed last week. There was a great deal of spread trade and the corn was the winner of that battle. Traders were willing sellers of the wheat and soybeans, but the corn spent most of the week creeping higher.

The Pro Farmer crop tour attracted a lot of attention as usual. They ended up finding smaller crops than USDA has projected with corn at 13.323 billion and sovbeans at 3.887 billion. The western Corn Belt was much better than the east, especially for the corn and it did seem that the production potential for the soybeans was going to be very good for the beans if the weather stays good for the rest of the growing season, which is why the beans lost ground to the corn.

On the charts we saw new contract lows for the Kansas City wheat and new multiyear lows for the soybeans. The Chicago wheat managed to stay above the previous week's lows and actually generated some shortterm buy signals. The corn, meanwhile, looks like it is in jeopardy of falling down to the post report lows especially if pressure in the stock market keeps traders nervous.

Overall, we are still dealing with a situation where the weather is not threatening. There has obviously been damage done in the Eastern Corn Belt, but we are far from a crop disaster. We may find at some point that the yields are much poorer than expected, but it seems that the bears are in contract for the time being. Look for pressure in the corn and soybeans until we see enough demand to offset the good crop.

Osborne introduces new heat pad indicator light for Stanfield® Pig Heating Pads

Osborne Industries, Inc., a leading manufacturer of swine management equipment, is pleased to introduce an all new electric indicator light for the company's signature Stanfield® pig heating pads. The patent-pending indicator light provides visual confirmation that heat pads are operating properly and providing crucial heat to newborn piglets in farrowing or growing pigs in nurseries.

Unlike other heat pad indicators, Osborne's product features two LED lights. The unique two-light system shows that electrical circuits are functioning properly, and that heat pads are drawing electricity and providing the necessary heat for young pigs. The addition of the heat pad indicator to Stanfield heat pads eliminates the need for infrared temperature wands or physically inspecting individual pads to ensure they are operating properly.

Developed by Osborne engineers, the system mounts on standard, singlegang electrical boxes at 120 or 240 volts and is easily installed by a certified electrician. The LED lights remain consistently bright, regardless of variable watt power. This means, if the temperature of a heat pad is controlled by a ramping controller to compensate for the reduction in heating required for piglet development, the LED lights remain consistently bright and visible, even as power is reduced to the pad.

The heat pad indicator light is a powerful diagnostic tool. "For more than 40 years, producers have recognized Osborne's Stanfield Heat Pads as the safest and most reliable method of providing under-body heat to baby pigs," said Osborne's engineering manager Brent Brown. "The reliability of the Stanfield brand is further solidified with the addition of this new product. Farm personnel will now have a visual way to reaffirm their heat pads are operating properly." The heat pad indicator light will alert producers to farrowing stalls requiring attention, so piglets are never without heat.

For more information on Osborne's new heat pad indicator light, or Osborne's complete line of pig production equipment, please call 1-800-255-0316 (1-785-346-2192) or visit www. osbornelivestockequipment.com.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Hay trade slow. Demand light to moderate for dairy alfalfa, light for grinding alfalfa and alfalfa pellets and grass hay. Rain fell last week, covering most of the State. Some areas were getting dry and needed the moisture, surprisingly western Kansas has had the most rain and even experienced flooding in some counties. As summer winds down and Fall arrives, interest is picking up for winter feed needs. The lower alfalfa prices are getting the attention of stock cow producers for their protein needs. If you have hay for sale or pasture to rent or need hay or grazing, use the services of the Hay and Pasture Exchange: www.kfb.org/commodities/haypasture/index.html

USDA report shows increasing internet access on U.S. farms

Seventy percent of U.S. farms and ranches now have access to internet, a 3 percent growth from 2013, according to the Computer Usage and Ownership report, released by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's National Agricultural Statistics Service (NASS)

The DSL (Digital Subscriber Line), remained the most popular method for accessing internet, accounting for 30 percent of all farms and ranches with internet access. Despite remaining in the lead, however, the DSL access is down 5 percent, from the 35 percent of farms that used this method

In contrast, wireless connection, which accounts for 29 percent, and satellite connection, which accounts for 21 percent of the U.S. total, showed significant growth in the past two years. Share of farms using these two methods went up 5 and 4 percent respectively.

According to the report, 43 percent of U.S. farms use computers for their business operations. Crop growers, at 47 percent, are more likely than livestock producers to use computers for business. In the livestock sector, 39 percent of produc ers use computers for busi-

Farmers' and ranchers' business computer uses include:

44 percent - Conducting business with a non-agricultural website

44 percent – Accessing federal government websites

19 percent – Purchasing agricultural inputs

16 percent - Marketing activities

Farmers in the western states are most likely to use computers for business. In that region, 48 percent of all farms use computers for that purpose. Western region was closely followed by the north central and northeast states, where 46 and 45 of all farms followed this practice. Southern states have the lowest percentage in this category. In that region 36 percent of all farms use internet to conduct

USDA encourages producers to consider risk protection coverage before fall crop sales deadlines

Farm Service Agency Administrator Val Dolcini encourages producers to examine the available U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) crop risk protection options, including federal crop insurance and Noninsured Crop Disaster Assistance Program (NAP) coverage, before the sales deadline for fall crops.

"Deadlines are quickly approaching to purchase coverage for fall-seeded crops," said Dolcini. "We remind producers that crops not covered by insurance may be eligible for the Noninsured Crop Disaster Assistance Program. The 2014 Farm Bill expanded NAP to include higher levels of protection. Beginning, underserved and limited resource farmers are now eligible for free catastrophic level coverage, as well as discounted premiums for additional levels of protection."

Federal crop insurance covers crop losses from natural adversities such as drought, hail and excessive moisture. NAP covers losses from natural disasters on crops for which no permanent federal crop insurance program is available, including forage and grazing crops, fruits, vegetables, mushrooms, floriculture, ornamental nursery, aquaculture, turf grass, ginseng, honey, syrup, bioenergy, and industrial crops.

USDA has partnered with Michigan State University and the University of Illinois to create an online at www.fsa.usda. gov/nap that allows producers to determine whether their crops are eligible for federal crop insurance or NAP and to explore the best level of protection for their operation. NAP basic coverage is available at 55 percent of the average market price for crop losses that exceed 50 percent of expected production, with higher levels of coverage, up to 65 percent of their expected production at 100 percent of the average market price, including coverage for organics and crops marketed directly to consumers.

Deadlines for coverage vary by state and crop. To learn more about NAP visit www.fsa.usda.gov/nap or contact your local USDA Service Center. To find your local USDA Service Centers go to http://offices.usda.gov. Federal crop insurance coverage is sold and delivered solely through private insurance agents. Agent lists are available at all USDA Service Centers or at USDA's online Agent Locahttp:// tor: webnlb.rma.usda.gov /apps/AgentLocator/#.

Producers can use the USDA Cost Estimator, https://ewebapp.rma.usda.g ov/apps/costestimator/Defa ult.aspx, to predict insurance premium costs.

USDA announces incentives to establish biomass crops – September 4 is deadline

U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) Farm Service Agency (FSA) adminis-North trator Val Dolcini announced that enrollment has begun for farmers and forest landowners seeking financial assistance for growing new sources of biomass for energy or biobased products within designated projects areas. The funds are available from the Biomass Crop Assistance Program (BCAP), which was Farmers reauthorized by the 2014 Farm Bill. Biomass energy facilities or groups of producers may submit proposals for new BCAP project areas. Proposals will be accepted on www.grants.gov through Nov. 6, 2015. USDA will also allocate $7.7 million towards four existing BCAP project areas in New York, Carolina, Ohio/Pennsylvania Kansas/Oklahoma, targeting the establishment of an additional 10,500 acres of shrub willow, giant miscanthus, and switchgrass for energy. Project area sponsors include Chemtex International, Aloterra Energy LLC. Abengoa Biomass LLC and ReEnergy Holdings LLC. and forest landowners may enroll for biomass establishment and maintenance payments for these four sites through Sept. 25, 2015.

In June, USDA began accepting applications from foresters and farmers seeking financial assistance for removing biomass residues from fields or national forests for delivery to energy generation facilities; the deadline for those applications is Sept. 4, 2015. The retrieval payments are provided at a cost-share match of $1 for $1 up to $20 per dry ton with eligible crops including corn residue, diseased or insect infested wood materials, or orchard waste. The energy facility must first be approved by USDA to accept the biomass crop, and deliveries to the facilities can continue until Dec. 11, 2015.

The 2014 Farm Bill authorizes funding each year for the program to assist with the establishment and delivery of biomass for energy or biobased products. To date, BCAP has provided incentives for producers across more than 48,000 acres in 71 counties and 11 different project areas. For more information on the program or to enroll in updates, visit www.fsa. usda .gov/bcap or contact your local FSA county office. To find your nearest FSA counoffice, http://offices.usda.gov.

The 2014 Farm Bill builds on historic economic gains in rural America over the past six years, while achieving meaningful reform and billions of dollars in savings for taxpayers. Since enactment, USDA has made significant progress to implement each provision of this critical legislation, including providing disaster

Kansas farmers encouraged to be proactive in wheat disease control

Kansas farmers are encouraged to be especially cognizant during wheat planting season to select wheat varieties with high resistance to fungal diseases as well as to apply fungicides to seed before drilling wheat this season. Wheat flag smut was detected in Kansas earlier this summer and with potential yield and trade implications from the fungus prevention in the upcoming crop will be important.

"Research has shown that the use of certified seed combined with fungicide seed treatments, which are very economical, are highly effective in preventing the presence of flag smut and is an important tool in successful mitigation of the disease," said Jeff Vogel, KDA's Plant Protection and Weed Control program manager. He noted that producers and seedsmen should follow proper protocols to ensure that a thorough and even application of fungicide is made to the seed to ensure a high level of product effica-

A wheat industry working group was assembled this summer to determine best voluntary management practices and mitigation strategies to help ensure that the presence of the disease, which is considered a harmful organism by some international trading partners, does not spread or increase in 2016.

While the most effective way to break the disease cycle, which can lie dormant in the soil for as many as four or five years, is using fungicide treated seed, other recommended strategies include avoiding early planting conditions that place seed into warm moist soils, which are known to favor infection by the flag smut fungus and to consider crop rotation with non-host crops such as soybeans, sorghum and corn, to reduce the risk of the disease emergence. Continuous wheat often favors and creates ideal conditions for wheat diseases to flourish.

K-State Research and Extension's Seed Treatment Fungicides for Wheat Disease Management publication is an excellent source for wheat seed treatments frequently used.

KDA's mission is to serve farmers and protect plant health in order to help ensure the continued strong contribution of agriculture to the state's economy. It is important to use as many voluntary strategies as possible to mitigate this disease which could have international trade implica-

American Gelbvieh Association provides genetic tools for ranchers

The American Gelbvieh Association (AGA) is excited to announce the launch of the Smart Select Service data management system that provides genetic tools to aid commercial cattlemen in the selection process. Smart Select Service is non-breed specific and is available for all commercial producers who want to increase the genetic value of their herds for the potential to increase profitability

Smart Select Service has the goal of being the best value in genetic management; commercial producers can enroll females for $1 per head. This small enrollment fee equips Smart Select Service members, also known as performance members, with a herd management database to manage all cow herd data from individual performance information to exposure and vaccination information. Herd management reports will be made available to performance members including herd summary reports, dam and progeny reports, and herdsire reports.

In addition, the AGA will be offering performance members access to the feeder profit index (FPI) and Stayability score on both males and females with appropriate data reported. FPI is an economic selection index developed to aid producers in selecting sires whose progeny will perform in the feedlot and on the rail. Stayability scores are used to gauge reproductive longevity of the herd. These scores predict the probability a sire's daughters will stay productive within a herd past six years of age. These tools will be predicted through the multi-breed cattle evaluation run biannually and by doing so, increase the accuracy of prediction of these two parameters to accelerate genetic improvement.

Performance members will be able to take advantage of consultation offered by trained AGA staff. Producers can also take advantage of DNA testing such as parent verification on all animals or the Maternal Edge Female Profile on Gelbvieh influenced animals at the respective test's additional the beef industry. AGA is proud to offer the Smart Select Service to the commercial cow-calf sector, and provide commercial producers with the tools necessary to select for increased genetic change to enhance their bottom line," says Kelli Retallick, American Gelbvieh Association Data Services Coordinator.

As of Monday, August 17th, producers are able to enroll females into the Smart Select Service online database. To learn "It's an exciting time in more about the specifics of enrollment go to www. gelbvieh.org/smartselect.html or contact Kelli Retallick at 303-465-2333 or kellir@gelbvieh.org.

> The American Gelbvieh Association is a progressive beef cattle breed association representing 1,500 members and approximately 40,000 cows assessed annually in a performance-oriented total herd reporting system.

Proper hay storage can reduce loss

By Jeri Geren, Crop Production Agent Wildcat Extension District

Large round bales can be a practical and economic way to put up hay to use at a later date. Reducing the amount of hay lost to storage is beneficial to any producer. It's key to note that storage losses occur even under the best storage conditions with any type of hay. However, losses are greatest for large round bales stored outside, which also happens to be the most common method of hay storage in Kansas.

Weathering losses are generally limited to the outer four to eight inches of hay stored outside. However, in a five-foot-diameter bale, approximately one third of the bale's volume is in the outer four inches, and more than half of the volume is in the outer eight inches. For a six-foot-diameter bale, one third of the hay is in the outer 6 inches, and one-half is in the outer 12 inches. Most commonly, four inches of weathering losses are found in bales stored unprotected outside.

Round bale storage losses can be minimalized through good management. One important factor is choosing the correct storage site. The deterioration at the bottom of bales stored on damp soil or on weeds and tall grasses can be substantial. A welldrained site will help minimize moisture absorption. Elevating bales by adding a layer of three to four inches of crushed rock to the storage site will help minimize losses on the bottom of the bales. Storing bales on the ridge of hill instead of near the bottom will also help to reduce bottom deterioration. The presence of trees around the storage site is another factor to consider. Bales stored outside need air circulation and sunlight to help dry the outer layer after a rain. Storing the bales under trees blocks wind circulation and sunlight. Any rain protection trees might provide is more than offset by the damage from shading.

The stacking method is also important in the amount of hay lost in storage. If bales are stored individually, a space of at least 18 inches between bales in needed for air circulation. Storing bales with the rounded sides touching is not recommended because this creates a trap for rain and snow. Tightly stacking bales end to end makes better use of the storage area and protects the ends from weathering. If bales are not stacked tightly against each other, rain could penetrate the ends and increase damage. North-south bale rows allow equal amount of sunlight on both sides of the bale row, which results in more uniform drying. Leaving at least three feet between rows allows air circulation and sunlight to reach bales and reduces the chance of snow accumulation on the bales. In the past, stacking bales in pyramids has been a popular way to minimize storage space requirements. However, if bales are not covered, weathering losses can be devastating.

Barn storage is the best method for preserving hay quality, but it can expensive if a new structure needs to be built. The economics of barn storage will also vary considerably from one area to another, so producers should carefully analyze the economics of barn storage for their individual operation, goals and needs.

If you have questions or would like more information, please call me at the office (620) 331-2690 or email me at jlsigle@ ksu.edu, or visit the Wildcat Extension District website wildcatdiswww. trict.ksu.edu.

Kurt Lockwood, Jessa Thorne, Jeannett Clampitt and Shelby Wagner spent the summer as part of Ceva Animal Health's inaugural summer internship program supporting the swine business unit. Lockwood and Thorne assisted with marketing and sales efforts as the company prepares its launch into the swine industry. Clampitt and Wagner played a role with the company's research and development teams.

"Ceva fully supports the educational and work experience opportunities for college students in the region," says Gary Robertson, director, swine business unit. "We want to foster opportunities that encourage youth to explore careers in the animal health industry. Our summer internship program offers college students exposure to both the corporate environment and in the field with producers so they can more fully understand the wide range of possibilities for a career in agriculture.'

Robertson adds that the four Ceva summer associates had a real impact in helping the achieve its goals.

"Our interns this year had tremendous enthusiasm and a diligent work ethic. They each made contributions in building the foundation of our swine business as we prepare to launch products into the market," says Robertson.

The Ceva summer associates represent four different colleges and universities and come from different backgrounds and have different educational focus-

Covering silage is more than worth the time and money

By J.W. Schroeder, Dairy Specialist,

NDSU Extension Service A reminder that despite the work, covering silage is cost-effective.

When silage is not tightly covered, air and moisture can enter the silo easily and adversely affect the ensiling process and the quality of silage during storing and feeding. This creates a great potential for excessive drymatter (DM) and nutrient losses, moldy feed and other problems.

The extent of these losses in the top two to four feet is far greater than most people realize. Several studies at Kansas State University reported at least a 3 percent loss in DM from the top 3 feet of silage in uncovered bunker silos, compared with bunkers covered with plastic sheeting weighted down with tires.

In a 12-foot-high by 80foot-wide by 140-foot-long bunker, the top three feet of silage contains approximately 672 tons (as fed) of silage at a density of 40 pounds per cubic feet. A 30 percent loss in this top 3 feet would equal 201.6 tons of as-fed silage. If this is corn silage, for example, and it is worth $50 per ton as-fed, the total loss would be at least $10,080.

This does not take into account any negative effects that the top three feet of spoiled material might have on DM intake, milk production or reproduction. Nor does it consider that addiwould be 53.8 tons of silage worth another $2.690. Technology is bringing more environmentally and user-friendly silage-covering products to the market each year, yet polyethylene (for example, 6-mil plastic) still remains one of the most cost-effective materials for covering silage. After it is placed over en-tional silage is lost on the sides and closed end of uncovered bunkers. These added losses easily can amount to 2 to 3 percent of the total silage volume. Assuming a 2 percent loss on the entire pile, an additional loss in this example

siled forage, the plastic sheet must be weighted down. Tires are the most commonly used weights. They should be placed close together so they touch (about 20 to 25 tires per 100 square feet). To reduce the number of tires needed and prevent water from pooling inside the tires, they should be cut in half and placed with the open side down.

The cost of plastic is in the range of $0.115 to $0.120 per square foot, so covering an 80- by 140-foot bunker silo with concrete sides (includes a 5 percent overlap) would cost about $1,344. If we assume that covering the forage takes about 25 manhours of labor to roll the plastic and throw the tires at $12 per hour, the total labor is $300 for this pile for the year. The initial cost of tires to cover this silo would life, this amounts to $35 per

Your decision is not if you should cover but what covering you should choose. While that discussion is not covered here, when all the calculations are made in this example, the total value of silage saved is far greater than the total cost of covering, providing about a 7.6-to-1 return on your investment (before the cost of disposal of the used plastic). These results are similar to those reported by Kansas State University researchers. Plus, you have the added benefit that your valuable animals are not exposed to the potential toxins in the spoiled silage.

I remember my dad lamenting the cost and time to put up silage, but in the same breath, he reminded me that silage was sure good feed to make milk.

Through the years, we have accepted waste as a part of doing business. However, the dramatic increase in the costs of growing and harvesting feed and forage has reduced profit margins. Reducing spoiled silage waste is one very effective cost-reducing decision.

And while new methods and materials are on the way, employing almost any technology that reduces waste and maintains feed quality is a sound and logical enterprise decision. The bottom line is that sealing the exposed surface is one of the most cost-effective management decisions in any silage program.

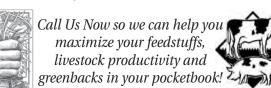

How about your livestock feed? Same deal, everybody's situation is different, and we do cater to what you need and want.

We will blend the supplements to complement your feedstuffs ... you name it, we can balance your ration.

BQA training included in KCA field day in Soldier

Cattle ranchers in Jackson and surrounding counties received Beef Quality Assurance (BQA) training and took part in other educational opportunities at the Kansas Cattlemen's Association (KCA) 2015 Cattle Field Day in Soldier. The free event was hosted by Schreiber Red Angus, who provided the venue and lunch to all who attended

"As independent producers, we too often find it can be difficult to find the time to attend educational opportunities, so in this case, KCA brought the classroom right to the ranch. It is exciting to have attendees engaged in a hands-on application within the country setting," commented Tyler Dupy, KCA executive director.

Attendees started the day with BQA training provided by Dr. Dave Rethorst of the Beef Cattle Institute. Beef Quality Assurance is a national program that provides guidelines for beef cattle production. The program raises consumer confidence through offering proper management techniques and a commitment to quality within every segment of the beef industry. BQA guidelines are designed to make certain all beef consumers can take pride in what they purchase, and can trust and have confidence in the entire beef industry.

Following lunch, Jody Holthaus of Meadowlark Extension discussed brush control and noxious weed management. Holthaus discussed how buckbrush is an undesirable species in grazing lands due to its shading out of desirable species therefore reducing grazing area. A proper pasture management plan can effectively reduce invasive species, while increasing edible foliage for livestock.

The Veterinary Feed Directive (VFD) was discussed by Dr. Don Sunday of the Heartland Veterinary Clinic. The new VFD rule will take effect October 1, 2015, and requires veterinary prescriptions for all VFD treated feed. In addition, prescriptions can only be delivered electronically or hand written.

Multiple live demonstrations were provided throughout the day. Triple C, Inc. provided attendees with demonstrations of their HydraBed bale handler. With its numerous attachments like the Square Bale Flaker, Dump Box, and Hydra Feeder, the HydraBed has numerous benefits out on the ranch.

Kelly Kennedy discussed Timed AI, and how it is beneficial and cost-effective with regard to breeding and herd management. Additionally, Kennedy demonstrated with live cattle, the process of AI prep step 1, which allows heifer cycle synchronization.

Following the AI demonstration, HSB Welding and Fabrication demonstrated skid steer attachments, including: backhoes, stump pushers, and dozer blades. Lang Diesel, Inc. was on site with a Challenger tractor and Massey Ferguson baler.

Cattlemen's Boot Camp in Oklahoma this October

Cattle producers are invited to gather for a Cattlemen's Boot Camp Oct. 15-16 at Oklahoma State University (OSU) in Stillwater, Okla. The event is hosted by the American Angus Association® in partnership with OSU, and provides purebred and commercial producers timely information presented by academic and industry professionals.

Registration is now available online and open until Sept. 30.

"There's something for everyone at our Cattlemen's Boot Camp events," says Jaclyn Clark, Association director of events and education. "We hope cattle producers in the southwest consider attending as a way to stay up-to-date on the latest technology and tools available to them in the beef business."

Open to all cattle producers, the event is funded by the Angus Foundation and features a day and a half of educational speakers and hands-on activities to help improve their herd operations. The workshop is packed with pertinent information including bull selection, reproductive technologies, genetic markets, forage management and much more

Registration is $75 per person, and includes meals and educational materials. Registration forms are due Sept. 30 and can be submitted electronically or mailed to Clark at the American Angus Association, 3201 Frederick Ave., Saint Joseph, MO 64506. Late and walk-in registrations are not accepted.

Kansas plays role in FEEDing Pakistan

Protein is a necessary component of the human diet. While different protein options exist, people who live in areas that border the ocean often rely on fish as a main source of protein.

Pakistan, a large country located in South Asia, borders the Indian Ocean. With a population of nearly 200 million people, it is a developing country that uses fish from the ocean for protein, but because getting enough fish from the ocean to supply the country can be difficult farm-raised fish has become a promising alternative.

"There are a lot of fishing villages (in Pakistan), but worldwide it's a phenomenon we're starting to get less fish from the sea," said Carlos Campabadal, faculty member in the Department of Grain Science and Industry at Kansas State University. "Raising fish is a good option to bring that source of protein back for the local market."

Pakistani entrepreneurs who reside around the world have an interest in making the country's aquaculture industry a success. he said. They have found raising fish brings its own challenges, such as how to feed and grow the fish effi-

Campabadal, who is also an outreach specialist for the IGP Institute in Manhattan, has taken part in developing solutions for these farmer-entrepreneurs.

Since 2011, he and others at K-State have been involved with the American Soybean Association's World Initiative for Soy in Human Health, or WISHH, project called FEEDing Pakistan. The project's aim is to teach Pakistanis about the benefits of using soy as a feed ingredient for farm-raised

The first phase of the project ended last year, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which has funded FEEDing Pakistan, announced this summer the approval of the project's second phase. Campabadal said Phase I assisted nearly 2.000 Pakistani fish farmers in increasing the market value of the country's tilapia production. In fact, the market value went from zero to an estimated 450 million rupees, or $4.59 million in 2014, according to Mike Woolverton, a partner in

AgriMarkets International and subcontractor for K-State's portion of the proj-

The project has also shown success, Campabadal said, in that people from different parts of the world have gathered to learn from one another. Pakistan's fish farmers have witnessed how sovbean meal provides good nutrition for the fish, because it has a good amino acid profile.

In addition, it is a much cheaper option than fishmeal, a traditional feed ingredient source for fish worldwide. It is a co-product of the fish processing industry and can be expensive. At times, fishmeal is not available in the local market.

"The majority of the farmers (in Pakistan) were just starting, so many of them actually grew to have bigger farms," he said. "We not only helped the farmers grow, but we also helped the industry grow. You need somebody to produce the feed and help buy all the ingredients. We connected with the local industry to make extruded pellets, the typical way you feed tilapia fish."

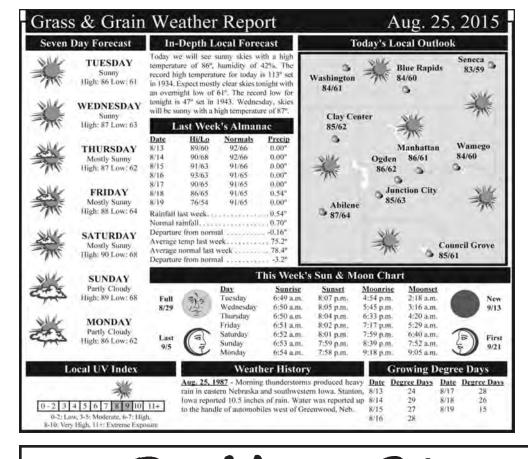

Campabadal said other partners in the project made it possible to bring the Pakistani farmers to the United States every year for the first three years of the project. Those partners included the University of Arizona, where visiting farmers could learn about marine biology and management, and the Kansas Soybean Commission, which provided funding for programs and trainings, and allowed for collaboration among Kansas and Pakistani farmers.

Benefits of FEEDing Pakistan extended to the U.S. soybean industry that has now identified a way to increase export opportunities. Campabadal said growing soybeans in Pakistan is not an option, so the U.S. farmer benefits by exporting more soybeans, and at the same time, other sectors of the domestic industry benefit. Soybean meal is a co-product that comes from crushing soybeans and taking out the oil. The co-product is exported to Pakistan.

Because Phase I of FEEDing Pakistan involved trainings and growing fish farms, the focus of Phase II is to provide the farmers with more technical knowledge to expand even more. Campabadal said the second phase involves WISHH, but K-State and the Kansas Sovbean Commission will continue conducting trainings on how to make the fish

"We will also teach them how the whole export market works. how you buy soybean meal and how world trade goes for soybeans," he said. "Phase II is more WISHH managing the project, but we'll still be heavily involved in the technical training that is our expertise.'

Campabadal added that the IGP Institute works with the U.S. Agency for International Development and other agencies to help reduce malnutrition and hunger in developing countries. He sees opportunity in expanding successful projects like FEEDing Pakistan to help other areas of the
