

Ag Outlook: Not so good, not all bad

By Miranda Reiman

"Who is going to flinch first?"

Dan Basse, president of AgResource Co., said that's the main question he and his team ponder when looking at this "plateau" phase in the ag markets.

"Is it your neighbor that's going to cut back? Is it you?" the analyst asked, as he addressed cattle feeders and allied industry representatives at the Feeding Quality Forum last month.

The world has added 179 million crop acres during the last decade, and live-stock production is currently in a "dynamic expansionary phase," Basse said. Ethanol demand has matured and a strong U.S. dollar hurts global competition.

"If you want to get bullish in American agriculture, the thing that you want to see is a drop in the U.S. dollar," he said. "The problem is, the United States is the reserve currency, almost by default, these days."

Yet even with more production from predicted record yields and stocks-to-use ratios, "the story for grains is not all that bad," he said.

South American drought hurt that region's corn yields before rainfall at 250% to 400% of normal hampered soybean production. That will bode well for U.S. exports.

"I worry that we don't have enough capacity," Basse said, noting the U.S. can move about 600 million bushels combined of corn, soybeans and wheat each month through its current infrastructure. "There are going to be months that we don't have enough capacity to export everything the world wants."

That creates a strong signal to cattle feeders, he said. "You've got to be prepared for basis appreciation because there's going to be a big sucking sound down at the Gulf. That sucking sound is the export demand sopping up bushels, and you can only hope that farmers will be willing to sell them."

Basse suggested corn will average around $3.40/bushel, and if it dips below $3.25, feeders "want to be a long-term buyer." AgResource predicts average soybean prices around $9.43/bushel, with lows around $9.25.

"We've lived through $3 corn and $1.10 or $1.20 cattle before. That's not something that's new," he said. "What's new is that our cost structure is out of whack."

Input prices are still relatively high and farm incomes have decreased the last four years, down to the lowest levels since 2001.

"Low prices don't mean the same for everybody," Basse said. Places like Argentina and Russia have weak currency, which bolsters their position in the marketplace.

"In the ag world, there are two different things that cause us to have anxiety," Basse said. "No. 1 is weather, which is always changeable and difficult. No. 2 is policy."

He explained, using Argentina as a case study. When Mauricio Macri was elected in December, his goal was to eliminate export taxes on most agricultural products.

Argentinian farmers were paying taxes in the 27% to 35% range: "The next day, you don't have to pay a tax at all – how are you going to feel?"

Farmers there are making $400/acre more this year compared to last.

That's a big contrast to the U.S.

"This is the first year you went to the fields and planted corn and soybeans looking at sizable losses," Basse said, noting his team estimates a $70/acre deficit. "Policy has to get involved here for the grain farmer to stop farming."

There is tempered optimism in the beef business, however.

Cow-calf margins are down, but Basse still predicts a profit of $100 per head out into 2017.

"When I look at annual feeding margins, it's getting better, but, boy, it's been a tough road," he said. "The good news is that per-capita meat consumption in the United States is rising again. We've seen price starting to stimulate more consumption of beef."

Basse said the futures in August were undervalued by about $10.

"We are not advocating strong hedging, unless you have the margin in the cattle market as we sit," he said. He predicted a first quarter cash-cattle price in the "mid-120s," noting, "It's not a big rally, but it's something."

Looking ahead to global factors and maintaining a competitive edge, Basse said producers need to keep improving their cattle, because the rest of the world is on it.

"If I go give this speech to Rockhampton in Australia, they're feeding more grain than they've ever seen before. Argentinians are putting in feedlots and they're going to be plowing up their Pampas where their cattle have been grazing," he said.

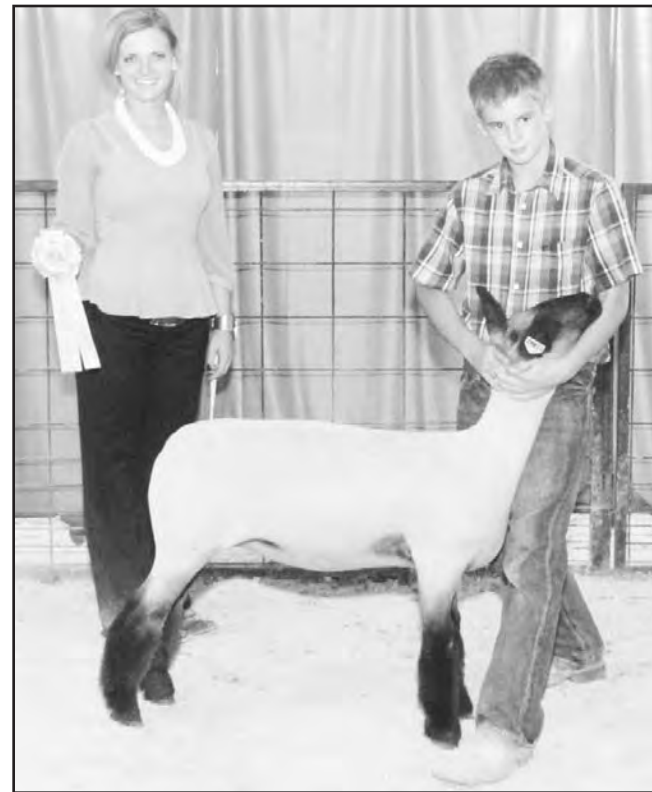

"We'll see the shift, more grain being fed and more focus on marbling and quality than before."

The title "grain-fed" alone will not hold the same distinction in another decade, he said.

The forums held in Grand Island, Neb., and Amarillo, Texas, drew more than 200. They were co-sponsored by Roto-mix, Feedlot magazine, Micronutrients, Zoetis and Certified Angus Beef LLC (CAB). To view presentations and summary information, visit www.feedingqualityforum.com.

Continued growth in meat supply hurts livestock prices, MU economist reports

As a livestock economist, Scott Brown hears the same question every day: "How low can prices go?"

The University of Missouri Extension specialist can't say when prices will hit bottom, as many factors affect the sharp decline. That includes weather, dollar strength and exports. "The growing meat supply is a big factor," Brown told the Agribusiness Policy Symposium, Sept 8 in Columbia.

"As long as we keep increasing record amounts of meat each year, prices will decline. A lot more meat is passing through U.S. markets," he said.

"We added three billion pounds of meat in 2015, and continued that at a rate never seen before. The growth is not over."

Beef, pork and chicken producers could add another three billion pounds of meat in the coming year. Sow numbers are going up. Beef herd owners saved every heifer they could to add to the cow herd.

"Producers respond a lot faster to rising prices than they do to falling prices. We're still expanding breeding herds."

The problem becomes what to do with the growing meat supply.

"We eat it, export it or cut the price to sell it," Brown said.

Producers have been through volatile cycles before.

"The old adage that 'the cure for high prices is high prices' still applies," Brown said.

In the 1990s, as supply outgrew demand, the prices fell. After the turn of the century, exports exploded.

From 2002 to 2014 exports continued to expand faster than the meat supply. Foreign buying was helped by the value of the U.S. dollar.

As dollar value changed, exports dropped. At the same time, the U.S. economy hit a recession and U.S. consumers cut back buying.

When demand outgrew the supply, the prices hit record levels.

With high meat prices, chicken producers built their flocks quickly. Pork producers responded next.

Biologically, it takes longer to expand the cow herd than a chicken flock. But now beef herd owners are catching up and sending more calves to the feedlots.

As foreign demand shrunk, prices declined. In late 2015, beef prices fell apart.

"What producers fail to remember is that the new low beef prices are better than calf prices were for a long time," Brown said. "Cow-calf returns are still at the eighth highest year since 1990."

Dropping feed prices are helping livestock producers. "Crop farmers don't like the lower grain prices, but that helps livestock people keep making money."

The spurt in pig production has tested the nation's slaughter capacity. With more pigs arriving, new packing plants are coming online to take care of the growing pig population.

"We can take care of the pigs," Brown said. "But what are we going to do with all of that pork?"

Kansas 4-H announces recipients of the Vanier Family Scholarship

Kansas 4-H members and alumni were recently selected as recipients of the newly established Vanier Family Scholarship Program for the 2016-2017 academic year.

"Our three kids, Mary, Marty and John, benefited greatly from 4-H, and we're delighted to support outstanding Kansas 4-H members as they pursue their education," said donors, Jack and Donna Vanier.

The Vanier Family Scholarship Program was established to enhance strong leadership skills engrained in Kansas 4-H members. The purpose of this program is to invest the educational endeavors of young professionals who have overcome greater than usual challenges by providing support for their educational goals.

"The Vanier Family Scholarship Program provides an opportunity to recognize those who benefited from the 4-H program, while making significant contributions to their own communities. The generosity of the Vanier family will have a positive influence on the recipients, their families and communities for years to come," Diane Mack, interim department head - 4-H Youth Development, stated.

The recipients include Carmen Amos, Solomon; Augustus Anders, Chapman; Hannah Caswell, Salina; Collyn Fouard, Brookville; Hannah Fry, Fort Scott; Jerica Hall, Independence; Libby Hefflin, Haysville; Cheyenne Lindsey, Blue Mound; Evan Morrical, Tescott; Elizabeth Roach, Topeka; Traci Ross, Rush Center; Justin Schmutz, Salina; Heather Schneider, Great Bend; Hayden Schrag, Pratt; Reid Shipman, Manhattan; Brandon Stahel, Overbrook; Justin Ward, Caney; Blade Winter, Clifton.

"This scholarship provides an amazing opportunity for these young people and I know the recipients represent the Kansas 4-H program very well," said Sarah Keatley, Kansas State Research and Extension events coordinator.

K-State Research and Extension is a short name for the Kansas State University Agricultural Experiment Station and Cooperative Extension Service, a program designed to generate and distribute useful knowledge for the well-being of Kansans. Supported by county, state, federal and private funds, the program has county Extension offices, experiment fields, area Extension offices and regional research centers statewide. Its headquarters is on the K-State campus, Manhattan.

Fjell, Thielen bring research, stewardship, education expertise to Kansas Corn

Dale Fjell Joins Kansas Corn Staff

Dale Fjell, Ph.D., has begun a new career as Director of Research and Stewardship for Kansas Corn. Fjell, who was a former K-State Extension Crop Production Specialist and more recently, the Northeast Area Extension Director, retired from K-State on Sept. 1.

"Dale's experience in research, agronomy and Extension, coupled with his familiarity with corn growers across the state, made him a perfect fit for this position," Kansas Corn CEO Greg Kriesek said. "Kansas Corn has worked with Dale for years, and he knows our challenges and opportunities well."

Corn farmers are part of an increased focus on stewardship and sustainability, and Dale is well-suited to guide Kansas Corn in those areas. His expertise in agronomy and Extension will also be a valuable asset for the Kansas Corn Commission when it considers future research projects, Kriesek said.

Sharon Thielen Joins Kansas Corn Staff

Sharon Thielen, Ph.D., has joined Kansas Corn as educational curriculum manager. In early September, Thielen left Kansas

State University after serving as assistant dean of academic programs in the College of Agriculture. She will now split time between two jobs: one with Kansas Corn and the other at home raising four young daughters. She and her husband, Kevin, also are active on their family farm.

"Sharon is exactly what we were looking for in an educational curriculum manager. The focus of her graduate degrees coupled with her work experience at the K-State College of Agriculture will help us continue to develop and advance our portfolio of education efforts," Kriesek said.

Barber Ranch donates Lot 1 Foundation Female for Mile High Night Sale

The Hereford Youth Foundation of America (HYFA) is honored to have the support of Barber Ranch, Channing, Texas, who will donate the Lot 1 Foundation Female to lead off the Mile High Night Sale Friday, Jan. 13 during the National Western Livestock Show in Denver, Colo.

The proceeds of the Foundation Female will benefit the HYFA Growing a Lasting Legacy Campaign. Since its inception in 2008, $645,000 has been generated through the sale of the Lot 1 female to support leadership and education.

"Barber Ranch is very proud to be supporting the Hereford Youth Foundation of America by donating BR Kate Rielle 5532 ET," said Terri Barber, American Hereford Association vice president and co-owner of Barber Ranch. "This female is an August-born heifer out of our Gabrielle foundation female and out of the acclaimed Hometown bull, so she's the best of both genetics that we've ever offered."

BR Kate Rielle 5532 ET is a direct daughter of the famed BR Gabrielle 5082, who was the two-time Denver champion female, supreme champion Hereford and dam of Denver champion Currency. BR Kate Rielle 5532 ET is also the granddam of the Denver champion Anastasia and her full brother, Aventus, who was named the 2016 Denver Supreme Champion Hereford.

"A big thank you goes to the Barber Family for digging into the heart of their program and selecting one of their best heifers to high-light the Mile High Night Sale," said Amy Cowan, American Hereford Association director of youth activities and foundation.

BR Kate Rielle 5532 ET will sell for half interest and no possession with Barber Ranch paying for all of her show expenses.

"We feel like there is no better way to support the next generation than with a female that can generate the type of attention and potential money that this heifer can bring for the foundation to help them reach the goal they are striving to achieve," Barber said.

Visit Herefordyouthfoundation.org for more information on the lot, or contact Amy Cowan at acowan@hereford.org or 816-842-3757.

Using a Crupper

Often overlooked by riders traveling in steep country, a crupper can save you and your mount a lot of inconvenience and make your ride more comfortable by keeping the saddle in place. A breast collar prevents a saddle from slipping back when you're climbing uphill, but a crupper holds your saddle to keep it from sliding forward when you're riding down a steep trail.

A crupper is a simple leather strap that connects the back of the saddle to the base of the tail. Another strap that loops under the tail connects to the first one. There are buckles to adjust the length of the straps. Sound simple? It is. That's what makes a crupper so easy to carry along when you head for the hills. Cruppers are small and light. They don't take up much room, and you can carry one in your saddlebags. If the trail gets steep, you can quickly snap the crupper on and keep your saddle where it ought to be.

There is a natural tendency for most riders to adjust their weight back over the cantle of the saddle and put more pressure in the stirrups when riding down a steep grade. On prolonged downhill rides, this can cause the saddle to slide forward on the horse's withers. A crupper can prevent this by holding the saddle in place, using your horse's tail as an anchor.

To rig your saddle for a crupper is easy. Use a leather punch and make a hole in the skirt of your saddle behind the cantle. Use a Chicago screw or rivet and connect a small D-ring to the hole. If you don't want to punch a hole in your saddle, you can rig a leather tie down to buckle the crupper on. The crupper simply snaps or buckles onto the D-ring. Then, run the leather strap under the horse's tail and buckle it back to the main strap.

The section that passes under the tail is made of soft leather. On some cruppers, this strap can be filled with a material that stays soft and comfortable. Usually the tail loop has buckles on each end to better adjust the fit to your horse.

If you can't find a crupper in your favorite saddle shop, you can ask any saddle maker to fashion one for you, or you can make it yourself. There's not much to it. With a little hardware and leather, you can make a workable crupper.

The main strap, running from the saddle to the horse's croup, is usually about 26 inches long. The saddle end of the strap has either a Conway buckle or a snap. The last 12 inches of the main strap is split, to accept both ends of the tail loop and has adjustment holes punched in both sides. The tail strap is about 16 inches long with buckles on both ends for connecting to the main strap.

Accustom your horse to a crupper before you head for the hills; it could prevent an interesting ride and maybe even a wreck. Your horse may be surprised and may not like it the first time he feels a crupper under his tail.

To fasten the crupper, unbuckle one side of the tail strap. Stand to the side and gently lift the tail. Lay the strap across his buttocks and lower the horse's tail onto it. If he accepts the strap under his tail, then lightly pull and tug on the crupper to get the horse used to the feel of it. If the horse doesn't like the idea of something under his tail, then you'll have to gradually accustom him to the strap until he finally accepts it. One way to do this: Lunge him in a round pen.

When you feel a horse is comfortable with the crupper under his tail and buckled to the saddle, then ride him around the corrals or pasture on level ground. A few rides will usually be enough for your horse to become accustomed to the crupper. Now, when you ride into steep country, you won't surprise your mount with something new; he'll know what a crupper is, and you'll both have a more enjoyable ride.

Cell phones and rural roadways do not mix

Fall harvest and texting do not mix, says University of Missouri Extension safety specialist Karen Funkenbusch. Turn your cell phone to TTYL (talk to you later).

Rural roads are full of hazards in the fall.

Farmers move large equipment from one field to another during harvest. They make wide turns, and large equipment reduces visibility. School buses make frequent stops on their morning and afternoon runs.

Shortened daylight hours and pending inclement weather force farmers and seasonal farmworkers to work long hours during harvest. Fatigue and stress reduce concentration and increase response time, Funkenbusch says.

Add texting drivers and you have a recipe for disaster, she says. Keep your hands on the steering wheel of your car, combine or grain truck at all times.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration reports that texting makes the driver 23 times more likely to crash. That is the same as driving after drinking four beers, NHTSA says.

Reduce the need for speed during harvest season. At 55 mph, it takes a car just five seconds to close the length of a football field and overtake a tractor moving 15 mph.

Funkenbusch says family members should talk about texting and driving whether they live in town or the country. Remind new drivers of the dangers of slow-moving farm equipment during planting and harvest seasons.

"Courtesy and patience are key to safety on the road," she says. "Getting to your destination safely is the main goal. A few extra minutes may save lives."

Farmers and workers should avoid the temptation to talk or text on cellphones while operating combines or driving grain trucks.

Funkenbusch offers these tips for drivers:

Be on the lookout for farm machinery that may turn unexpectedly onto public roads from fields or driveways.

Keep a safe distance.

Allow extra travel time during harvest.

Watch for roadside obstacles such as mailboxes, bridges or road signs that may cause the machinery operator to move to the center of the road.

Allow extra time and room to pass farm equipment.

Obey traffic rules, share the road and be courteous.

For more information on how to be safe on the farm, go to extension.missouri.edu/farm-safety.

Veterinary researchers working with feedlots, dairies nationwide to improve antibiotic monitoring

The Food and Drug Administration has greenlighted a pilot project by veterinary researchers at Kansas State University to monitor antibiotic use in beef feedlots and dairies with a $1.5 million grant — $300,000 per year for five years.

"Our long-term goal is to establish a functional and efficient antibiotic use monitoring system in beef and dairy production systems, which will support continued advancement of antibiotic stewardship in the United States," said Michael Apley, Frick professor of production medicine and clinical pharmacology in the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Apley is working with Brian Lubbers, director of the Clinical Microbiology Laboratory in the Kansas State Veterinary Diagnostic Laboratory, and Sandra Godden, a veterinary professor at the University of Minnesota.

"This funding opportunity was issued because of one of the biggest challenges facing our human and animal health care systems today — that of antibiotic resistance," Apley said. "This challenge threatens to impair, or perhaps remove in many cases, the relatively recent ability to dramatically change the course of bacterial infectious disease."

The research team is collaborating with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Center for Epidemiology and Animal Health, or USDA CEAH, on data-gathering design structures for industry representation. Data will be collected from 30 feedlots and 32 dairies in states such as California, Kansas, Texas, Colorado, Nebraska, Iowa, Pennsylvania and Minnesota. Participation in the study is both voluntary and anonymous.

"We are fortunate to have the collaborative assistance of both the beef and dairy industries, and the USDA CEAH," Lubbers said. "With their help, we aim to create usable systems that can be adopted by agriculture to understand and continuously improve our antibiotic use practices."

Apley said that a primary goal of the research team is to provide detailed benchmarking data so that individual producers and veterinarians can evaluate their antibiotic uses in comparison to their peers.

"This process will open multiple opportunities to study how we can continue to advance antibiotic stewardship in food animal production systems, making our data the starting point for multiple other studies," Apley said. "Participation by producers is yet another indication that food animal producers take seriously the health of both the animals in their care and the consumers of the food products which they produce."

Strong week for U.S. pork; beef sharply lower

U.S. pork exports for the week of Aug. 26 through Sept. 1 totaled 19,500 metric tons (mt), up 4 percent from the previous week and 8 percent above the previous four-week average.

Increased exports to Mexico (7,500 mt, +9 percent and the largest since December), Japan (4,050 mt, +4 percent), Hong Kong (1,260 mt, +16 percent and the largest since June 2015), Chile (690 mt, +54 percent and the largest since March), the Philippines (610 mt, +305 percent and the largest since October) and Colombia (530 mt, +44 percent) outweighed lower results for Canada (1,390 mt, -10 percent), China (1,320 mt, -1 percent), South Korea (960 mt, -24 percent) and Australia (380 mt, -13 percent).

Pork net sales were 24,300 mt, up 1 percent from the previous week and 16 percent above the previous four-week average. Sales increased to Korea (7,720 mt, +151 percent and the largest since June 2015), Canada (1,670 mt, +8 percent), Chile (1,380 mt, +119 percent and the largest since July 2015), Colombia (760 mt, +43 percent) and the Philippines (340 mt, +18 percent). Sales slowed to Mexico (6,110 mt, -10 percent), Japan (3,960 mt, -5 percent), Hong Kong (1,400 mt, -10 percent), China (510 mt, -6 percent) and Australia (140 mt, -86 percent).

U.S. beef exports were the lowest of 2016 at 8,100 mt, down 41 percent from the previous week and 43 percent below the previous four-week average. Exports were down to all primary destinations including Japan (2,750 mt, -34 percent), Korea (1,740 mt, -56 percent), Hong Kong (1,220 mt, -19 percent), Mexico (890 mt, -49 percent), Taiwan (770 mt, -32 percent) and Canada (330 mt, -61 percent).

Beef net sales were 9,200 mt, down 20 percent from the previous week and 36 percent below the previous four-week average. Sales increased to Canada (890 mt, +32 percent), but slowed to Japan (3,110 mt, -34 percent), Korea (3,100 mt, -10 percent), Mexico (880 mt, -43 percent), Hong Kong (530 mt, -74 percent) and Taiwan (130 mt, -87 percent).

Source: USDA/FAS (includes exports and sales of whole muscle cuts).

Percent change is compared to the previous four-week average, unless otherwise noted.

Export is defined as an actual shipment from the U.S. to a foreign country.

Export sale is defined as a transaction entered into between a reporting exporter and a foreign buyer. Sales can be cancelled or adjusted in following weeks, thus "net" sales are reported as the difference between new sales and any cancellations or adjustments.

Beef Cattle Institute launches pregnancy analytics mobile app

The Beef Cattle Institute at Kansas State University is making it easier for producers and veterinarians to manage pregnancy diagnosis information with a new mobile app called Pregnancy Analytics.

Designed to serve as an instant data collection and analysis tool, the app will facilitate the transformation of data into actionable information for individual herds.

Not only will the app allow cattlemen to input records chute-side with ease, but it will evaluate the success of the breeding program at the time that a herd is palpated and provide a benchmark for comparison against other herds in the region.

The app will accept the following information:

- Pasture ID/herd name.
- Breed — up to three breeds, or other cow description.
- Cow I.D.
- Age.
- Body condition score.
- Number of days bred.

From this, projected calving dates are generated and graphs are created to display the distribution of the producer's future calving season.

"The Pregnancy Analytics app offers easier data entry than using a pen and paper while providing the immediate data assessment and visualization of a chute-side computer," said Robert Larson, the Roger E. and M. Elizabeth Coleman chair in food animal production medicine at Kansas State University's College of Veterinary Medicine. "Additionally, the data and report can be emailed to the client or stored on the device, and the data can be converted to a spreadsheet for further appraisal."

According to Brad White, interim director of the Beef Cattle Institute, or BCI, and professor of production medicine, this is the first of several interactive decision-making tools that will be designed for industry use.

"Veterinarians can use this app to convert pregnancy-check data to actionable information for their clients," he said. "This is the first of several apps that BCI will be releasing to enhance decision-making by veterinarians and their beef clients."

The Pregnancy Analytics app is available for download for Apple or Android markets. More information can be found at beefcattleinstitute.org, or contact 785-564-7459 for assistance.

Kansas State University's Beef Cattle Institute utilizes collaborative multidisciplinary expertise to promote successful beef production through the discovery and delivery of actionable information and innovative decision support tools. The institute's activities also are part of the university's leadership in global food systems.

Brett Loader led the grand champion breeding ewe at the Clay County Fair, with Samantha Trehal serving as judge for the event.

Are Your Farm Trucks Ready For Harvest?

The challenge is to make sure that your fleet is properly operating and properly maintained. A thorough inspection should be done before you hit the fields and highways. This will help prevent safety issues and costly breakdowns. In these challenging times proper planning is prudent.

When it comes to your vehicle have it in a professional repair facility. Our dealership caters to agribusiness customers. We can inspect and repair suspensions and drive trains, alignments, brakes and electrical and have the proper equipment and expertise to do it.

The investment will be worth it when your vehicle spends time operating at peak efficiency safely.

If your vehicle is past its prime, consider purchasing or leasing a new or late model vehicle. There are various payment plans that can be structured to your farm income.

We also provide and install new bodies including mechanics bodies with cranes, and flat beds with gooseneck hitches. We can switch out on site your current body to a new or newer unit if compatible. We can update your current body such as lighting and paint then reinstall it.

This could negate part of the new purchase price.

Have a safe harvest!

I have a background in Agribusiness, Fleet Management and the Fire Service. I will be answering questions and be writing continued articles. You can contact me at any time if you have any comments or questions.
