

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crotts

Last week's supply and demand report was a mixed bag. Both the U.S. and World corn figures showed tightening stocks, which is supportive. The USDA was pretty aggressive in increasing the export estimate after being pretty aggressive in cutting the export estimate earlier in the crop year. World stocks are expected to decline more than 10% and it would be unusual export market. It has taken some time for the big sales to show up, but the combination of a weaker Dollar and the tightening world supplies have brought the buyers to our door.

The surge in demand has helped to move the corn market to the highest level since October and the trading funds still have a large number of short positions to cover, which can keep this rally going for a while. Right now one corn to move up to the $3.76 level before option expiration on the 23rd.

Wheat supply and demand numbers were not as friendly. There was a cut in world stocks, but in the U.S. we saw ending stocks climb back over one billion bushels, which feels very heavy from a psychological standpoint. The problem was a cut in the export estimate, which wasn't too surprising considering the recent sales pace. The weak dollar hasn't seemed to help wheat demand as much as it has the corn.

The Drought Monitor continues to worsen for both the Hard Red Winter and Hard Red Spring Wheat Belts, so that is still a supportive factor, but nothing supports a factor quite like demand. There is no indicator that the weather is going to improve any time soon, so chances are increasing that we end up with a subpar crop and lower ending stocks in the new crop

Soybean numbers were bearish. The world ending stocks were basically unchanged, but U.S. ending stocks were increased by 60 million bushels thanks to a cut in the export estimate. Our export pace has been a bit slower than desired, so it wasn't too surprising to see the cut, but it was interesting that USDA was so aggressive during this critical weather period in South America. Soybean availability could be cut quite a bit from current estimates if there isn't an improvement in Argentine weather. Our exports could easily climb back towards record levels if we see further tightening in the South American production estimates. The charts still suggest we will see the March soybeans back at $10.00 or possibly $10.25 by option expiration.

Cattle traders seemed to have one eye on the stock market most of last week. The correlation between the stock market and the cattle wasn't perfect, but it sure seemed easier for the cattle to move higher when the stock market wasn't getting beat up. If the relationship continues next week, the cattle should have a good start since the stock market closed much better than where Grass & Grain, February 13, 2018 it was trading when the cattle closed. However, the big key will be where cash cattle trade finally takes place. As of mid-afternoon Friday, there wasn't any to speak of.

The cattle charts, to me, look bullish. I still think that the April live cattle will see the $130 level soon and the March feeders are still headed to $154. This will happen, of course, as long as we avoid a stock market crash

A Kansas State University researcher has licensed a new vaccine to an animal health company to fight a highly contagious swine disease overseas. A second discovery by the researcher could improve vaccines for the disease and help protect the U.S. from an outbreak. Jishu Shi, professor of vaccine immunology and director of U.S.-China Center for Animal Health in the university's College of Veterinary Medicine, has developed a method of producing a classical swine fever vaccine safely and inexpensively. The disease can cause devastating epidemics among pigs if left unchecked.

Shi's vaccine uses a protein from the virus rather than a live or attenuated virus, which means the vaccine poses no biosecurity risk to produce in the U.S., where classical swine fever was eradicated in 1978. Shi licensed his new subunit vaccine to an animal health company in China to continue to study its field efficacy. Classical swine fever has not been eliminated in China, and each of the 700 million pigs raised annually in the country currently receives two doses of vaccine against the virulent disease. Shi's version requires only one dose. "We need to test the vaccine in the field to prove it will work," Shi said. "If it does, we can help China eradicate the disease, which further secures the U.S. by ensuring the disease doesn't spread to our shores."

Pigs given the current modified live virus classical swine fever vaccine test positive for the dis-will help develop a test to differentiate infected from vaccinated animals, known as a DIVA strategy. Shi and his collaborators identified two specific antibodies that can be used to differentiate whether pigs are infected or vaccinated, and he is working with colleagues at the U.S. Department of Agriculture, in Europe and in China to conduct more trials and gain full validation.

ease. Shi's other discovery

"This exciting discovery could result in solving an economic and trade problem in China — vaccines are expensive, and countries with classical swine fever can't export pork - and a security problem for the U.S.," Shi

Peter Dorhout, Kansas State University's vice president for research, said Shi's work highlights the university's capacity for addressing high-consequence diseases.

'Our researchers develop real solutions to problems that threaten global food systems," Dorhout said. "Shi's work shows how we are expanding our reach around the world to build relationships, provide expertise and keep our food industries and supplies safe."

Shi conducted his research in the university's Biosecurity Research Institute, or BRI. The institute gives investigators access to a biocontainment facility in which they can safely conduct research on diseases that threaten animal, plant and human health. Shi's work was supported by a grant from the National Bio and Agro-defense Facility, or NBAF, Transition Fund.

"I couldn't do this work without the NBAF Transition Fund and the BRI," Shi said. "It gives us the competitive advantage of doing research on these diseases. This is an essential capacity, and we have a very good team there."

Stephen Higgs, director of the Biosecurity Research Institute, said Shi's work demonstrates the value of the facility. how funded research at the institute benefits the Kansas State University community as a whole, and how the institute's capabilities dovetail with the National Bio and Agro-defense Facility, which is the Department of Homeland Security's foremost animal disease research facility that is being built adjacent to Kansas State University's

"Our mission is to protect the U.S. and the world from diseases that we hope will never spread to North America," Higgs said. "Classical swine fever is one of the diseases that will be studied at NBAF, and we're proud to be supporting progress in fighting this economic threat to pork production

"How to Not Go Broke Ranching" is the theme for the 2018 KGA Winter Grazing Association Winter Conference to be held February 24, 2018 at the Kansas State Polytechnic Campus, 2310 Centennial Road, Salina. The workshop will feature wellknown Oklahoma rancher and educator Walt Davis. The title of the workshop is derived from Walt's book How to Not Go Broke Ranching: Things I Learned the Hard Way in Fifty-plus Years of Ranching. Also joining the stage will be agronomist Dale Strickler. KGA president and Green Cover Seed educator, to present on "How to Create a Drought Resilient Soil" and "Providing for Livestock in a Drought."

Walt Davis is from a five-generation ranch and has spent fifty-plus years as a working rancher with interests in west Texas and southeast Oklahoma. After almost going broke following the advice of high-tech agriculture experts, he spent years developing a biological approach to ranching based on planned rotational grazing. Biodiversity exploded under the new management with beneficial organisms from dung beetles to earthworms increasing as pest organisms decreased. Expenses dropped as production increased so that the ranch was consistently profitable. For the last twenty years he has worked with land owners, ranchers and both public and private organizations as a management consultant, adviser and teacher. He is in demand as a speaker and over the years has spoken to a diverse collection of audiences on his passion for good land management. He is a past president of Holistic Management of Texas and of the Oklahoma Land Stewardship Alliance and is vitally interested in promoting land use that is profitable, sustainable and user-friendly.

Walt has demonstrated on his own operations as well as on client operations that ranching and farming can be financially profitable while improving soil health and the overall health of the land. He is the author of numerous articles and has published three books. Plan to attend the workshop and hear Walt share his "Low Input Ranching, Wisdom from Years of Experience.'

Kansas beef community to donate 2,000 beef servings to local food bank Food insecurity, or not knowing where your next meal may come from, impacts more than 360,000 Kansans. Additionally, nearly 82% of food-insecure individuals report having to choose inexpensive, and often unhealthy, food options because they cannot afford healthier alternatives. This often results in a disproportionate ly use our natural resources in order to provide beef at an affordable price so that it can be enjoyed by everyone. Rural America sustains when its residents focus on giving back, and it is an honor for us to join Just Food and the Kansas Beef Council (KBC) to help make that a reality for Douglas County."

Charitable contributions are common for the Kansas beef community. Surveys show more than 50% of U.S. farmers and ranchers routinely give back to their state and local communities through charitable giving, compared to the national average of 7% for the general public. Food banks are a vital resource for local communities. However, less than 11% of all food donations are high-quality protein like beef. While there may be a bump in food pantry donations during holiday periods, food banks often struggle to fulfill protein requirements for local communities during other times of the year.

Just Food Kansas director of volunteers and community engagement Elizabeth Stephens, said the beef donation is greatly needed and appreciated.

"We are able to not only provide beef to our clients, but we are also able to teach folks how to stretch their dollar and still have protein in their meal. Joining efforts with (Kansas beef producers) provides an opportunity for our clients and community to learn more about the beef community, an opportunity that is unique to this area of Kansas," said Stephens.

In addition to the donation, Kansas Beef Council director of nutrition Abby Heidari, RDN, LD, provided nutritional information on heart health to attendees during the hands-on cooking classes and recipe sampling. 'Just Food's clients gained insight into which cuts of beef are more economical, how to stretch the nutrition of ground beef in a recipe, and how to modify ground beef recipes to decrease calories and increase nutrients," said

Heidari. Heidari sampled and shared the recipe for an "Easy Skillet Chili Mac," which contains a few standard ingredients commonly found in food pantries. KBC funds programs in promotion, research, consumer education and producer communications through the $1.00 per head beef checkoff paid by pro-

The sixth round of NAFTA negotiations ended in Montreal with no firm conclusions but with commitments to come back to the table in late February for a seventh round in Mexico City.
U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer re-marked during a press con-ference that the talks need to move faster, but there was a widespread sense of commitment to continuing negotiations and increased optimism that an agreement would be reached without U.S. withdrawal. This approach is urged by most of the U.S. business community and, increas-ingly, leaders in Congress and state governments, as a result of a tremendous effort in recent months to educate farmers, policy mak-

Back at home, the President said trading relationships need to be "fair and reciprocal" and pledged to "fix bad trade deals and negotiate new ones" during his State of the Union address on Jan. 30. Of note, the President did not specifically mention either NAFTA or China during his remarks.

Hay market activity slow to moderate; Demand good for all alfalfa, as supplies and offerings for alfalfa continue to be scarce. Grass hay inquiries have increased. Prices overall are generally steady. According to the U.S. Drought Monitor, moderate and severe drought expanded in Kansas. It is reported that wells are drying up, creeks and springs are going dry, and ponds are near 2012 drought levels, especially in the central part of the state. According to end-of-January USDA reports, 79% of the topsoil in Kansas was rated short to very short of moisture (dry to very dry) and 44% of the winter wheat crop was in poor to very poor condition. The abnormally dry (D0) category is at 100 pct, moderate drought (D1) is at 65 pct, severe drought (D2) is at 29 pct and extreme drought (D3) remains at 4 pct.
