Drought-tolerant corn to be featured

GRAND ISLAND, Neb. (AP) — Drought-tolerant corn will be highlighted Sept. 9-11 on a test plot at Husker Harvest Days.

The new biotech variety of corn will become increasingly critical as population pressure and possible climate change combine to make water more scarce in many parts of the world, according to the agricultural products company Monsan-

The technology is vital to Nebraska because the state receives less annual rainfall than other states in the western corn belt, said Bob Mc-Cauley, Monsanto technology development manager in Nebraska.

"Also, our topsoil and subsoils tend to be more porous, so they're more coarse and have less waterholding capacity than the soils of Iowa and Illinois," he said.

Nebraska farmers are able to implement irrigation practices using water from aquifers, rivers and lakes, but the practice is stressing the environment, McCauley said.

"We've had about seven years of drought, which has caused the aquifers and lakes to go down," said Mc-Cauley. "That means there's less water available for farmers to use for irrigation. Also, people have started worrying about running out of water, so they've put restraints on growers for water use."

Drought-tolerant corn applies technology that has consistently delivered yield improvements compared with controls under waterstressed conditions, according to Monsanto officials.

First-generation drought tolerance is targeted to minimize uncertainty in farming by buffering against the effects of water limitation, primarily in areas of annual water stress, Monsanto officials said. In the U.S., this area has historically been the dryland farms of the western Great Plains.

Monsanto said the firstgeneration product is envisioned as the first in a family of drought traits that has the potential to provide farmers with irrigation cost savings, to help them achieve more consistent yields in times of drought, and to protect against drought stress in normally rain-fed areas.

As of January, Monsanto said, the first-generation project moved into Phase III of its research and development pipeline, making it the industry's first biotechnology drought project to move into the regulatory phase.

With the continuing decline of the Ogallala Aquifer water level and increasing cost of pumping water, the use of drought-tolerant and high-yield corn hybrids is a key for sustainable corn production under limited irrigation," said Wenwei Xu, an AgriLife Research corn breeder in Lubbock, Texas.

Ag Lenders Conferences set

The Kansas State University Ag Lenders Conferences will be in the eastern and western parts of the state this year to accommodate as many participants as possible, regardless of where they live and work.

The first conference is set for Oct. 1 at the K-State Southwest Research and Extension Center at 4500 East Mary St. in Garden City. The second conference is Oct. 8 across from K-State's Snyder Family Stadium in the International Grains Program Conference Center at 1980 Kimball Ave. in Manhattan.

Early registration deadlines are Sept. 25 for the Garden City conference and Oct. 2 for the Manhattan program. The cost for early registration is $80. Registration at the door the day of the conference is $90. The fee includes lunch at the selected location.

The Kansas Wheat Assessment

ment to 1.5 cents per bushel, effective Jan. 1, 2009. It is the first such increase

Why is the assessment increase being sought?

In recent years, Kansas Wheat Commission reserves have diminished due to short crops and reduced wheat acreage.

How will wheat producers benefit?

Assessment collections are used for research, promotion and education. An in-depth survey of producers in 2007 shows:

- widespread support of the wheat assessment, and
- priority investments to be in research.

Kansas grown. Kansas good.

Although not required by law, the Kansas Wheat Commission seeks all comments on the assessment increase.

Please write to: Kansas Wheat Commission 217 Southwind Place Manhattan, KS 66503; call 1-866-75-WHEAT, fax 785-539-8946 or e-mail: kswheat@kswheat.com for farmers to sign up for 2008 uninsured crops to maintain insurance coverage under the Supplemental Revenue Assistance Payments (SURE) program and Art Barnaby wants to make sure it doesn't slip under producers' radar.

"In Kansas, crops are not crops until they are in the bin," said the Kansas State University agricultural economist. "Therefore, for growers with 2008 wheat losses or if they expect to have a large number of fall harvested crop acres, the best suggestion is to pay the $100 NAP fees on pasture and other uninsured crops."

NAP refers to the federal non-insured crop disaster assistance program.

Barnaby, who is a risk management specialist with K-State Research and Extension, said farmers should check with their U.S. Department of Agriculture Farm Service Agency (FSA) office to make sure all of their crops are covered with either crop insurance, NAP or Catastrophic Risk Protection, also called CAT.

'There is a real lack of information for farmers trying to make informed decisions before paying 2008 NAP and CAT fees to be eligible for SURE payments on 2008 crop losses," he said.

"It is important that producers have all fees paid to maintain eligibility for SURE coverage on their fall 2008 crops. Clearly, there are still weather perils that could destroy fall harvested crops and the SURE payment would be helpful.

Barnaby said he is telling producers that saving a couple of hundred dollars is not worth the tanks of gas for your pickup," he said of the premiums to ensure the cover-

Another confusing part of the current crop insurance system is that ACRE is not available until 2009, but SURE, which could be viewed as free disaster aid, covers 2008 crops and 2009-2012, Barnaby said.

Another difficulty the lack of information on these programs is causing is for farmers who are making winter wheat insurance decisions.

Yard & Garden Tips By Gregg Eyestone

When to pick fruit

A common question at this time is about harvesttree fruits. Peach, apple and pear trees are loaded with fruit this year. They are making up for last year's Easter freeze which wiped out most, if not all of last year's crop. If you didn't thin or remove some extra fruit this spring, the tree may not have enough food reserves to produce much of a crop next year.

Most of us home gardeners take the fruit when we can get it and don't thin. There are many factors that prevent fruit production. We can't predict next year's weather for a dependable crop.

We have two peach trees on the property. One is almost ripe. You can tell by the aroma and firmness or "lack of" from the fruit. The immature green color of the fruit turns to a light green or cream. Taste is perhaps the next and best determining factor. All of these tree fruits will continue to ripen after picking

Apple varieties allow for a long harvest period. Just as the peach, there is a color change from green to light green or cream. Some varieties release from the tree easily when ripe. Taste and European or typical pear shape pears are harvested before they are treeripe but when mature. When harvested immature, they will have poor flavor and won't keep. Harvest just as pear flavor and aroma can be detected. Pears harvested too late will have poor flavor and texture.

Asian or apple shape pears are harvested when the color of the skin changes from green to yellow. Again aroma and taste is the best next step in determining ripeness. Asian pears ripen earlier than our European pears. One of the harvest season problems is that winds and rain easily dislodge fruits from trees when ripe, creating Community gardens come to life in North Lawrence

Brooks Hanson no longer is surprised when he wakes up and sees a neighbor or two squatting in his front yard.

In fact, he welcomes them.

This spring, an informal community garden sprang up on Hanson's land in North Lawrence Hanson decided he had more garden than he needed. And his neighbors many of whom belong to the Lawrence Sustainability Network and moved to North Lawrence for its dark, rich soil - didn't have enough.

So a partnership was forged.

"It would get overgrown with weeds just because there weren't enough people," said Iris Wilkinson, who lives across the alley from Hanson.

Now, about a dozen people help garden the plot. Wilkinson gets winded when she lists what is being grown: peppers, chard, potatoes, tomatoes, turnips, beans, corn, squash, pumpkins, basil, okra, asparagus, strawberries and more.

Single mom Marie Wheeler said she doesn't have the time to spend "luxurious" hours in the garden. So, this summer, she planted strawberries and asparagus. And then she helped weed the community garden. In return, the harvest has been unending.

"Everybody pitches in a little and they reap so much more. That is really the idea of it," Wheeler said.

The plot of land is among the newest in Lawrence's long history of community gardening.

About a half dozen community gardens are scattered throughout Lawrence. Some are more formal with waiting lists and an official plot of land for each gardener to cultivate. Others, like the one in North Lawrence, are loosely organized with the gardeners planting and harvesting where and what they like.

On one evening this summer, Hanson helped dig up some purple potatoes and then sat on the side of the garden in a lawn chair. He chatted with his neighbors while drinking a beer. Wheeler's 5-year-old son, Oscar, with hoe in hand, bounced between gardeners. Squash was picked and weeds were pulled as the sun set.

food to sell during State Fair to fund scholarships

Visitors to the Kansas State Fair Sept. 5-6 will have an opportunity to sample award-winning 4-H foods, said Dana Hinshaw, a former Kansas 4-H member and volunteer coordinator for the 4-H Bake Sale.

The sale, scheduled to begin at 5 p.m. Sept. 5, will be held in 4-H Centennial Hall at the north end of the fairgrounds. It will continue until 9 p.m. when the building closes, and resume at 9 a.m. Sept. 6 and continue until all food is sold.

To enter a foods and nutrition project at the state fair, a 4-H'er must be 10 years of age or older and have earned a top award on the project at a county fair earlier this year.

More than 1,800 4-H foods and nutrition entries have qualified for entry in the Kansas State Fair this year, but school and other community commitments prevent many 4-H members from bringing the fresh foods to Hutchinson, said Diane Mack, coordinator for the 4-H foods and nutrition exhibits at the state

Mack, who is a Kansas State University Research and Extension 4-H youth development specialist based in northeast Kansas, is expecting 1,000 to 1,200 entries. She will ask judges to choose representative samples for display before offering remaining entries for sale after judging is completed.

Display space is limited, said Mack, who explained that making the fresh foods available for purchase allows for the foods to be enjoyed and raises money for scholarships.

Monies raised at the bake sale will fund scholarships for the Kansas International 4-H Youth Exchange Program or IFYE, Hinshaw

The international exchange program was introduced in 1948 and has offered opportunities for Kansas youth every year since, said Mary Kay Munson, a former Geary County 4-H member who traveled to India as an IFYE.

Munson, who has devoted her career to Extension efforts in Kansas, Iowa and Illinois, serving a state specialist and interim state director, still values her experiences with the program. Currently, she serves as volunteer state coordinator to create opportunities for others, which she said: "help youth and young adults develop a greater understanding of the larger world and global culture as they also build self-esteem, and improve communication and problem-solving skills."

This year, thanks to the IFYE program, eight Kansas 4-H members have traveled to Japan, Costa Rica, Finland, Australia and Germany.

The travel opportunities vary, Munson said. Students visiting Japan are may enroll in a 3-1/2 week language and culture program before their month-long visit to Japan.

Students enrolled in the program are typically ages 14-19; 4-H alumni, ages 19-25, also can apply for the travel opportunity and may spend up to six months in the IFYE program.

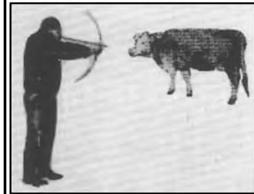

The program works both ways, said Munson, who noted that IFYE participants from Costa Rica, Taiwan, Germany and Norway chose Kansas as their educational site this year.

Past and present IFYEs will be staffing the bake sale and are available to answer questions about the program and the opportunities it provides, Munson said.

More information on the Kansas IFYE Program will be available in 4-H Centennial Hall during the Kansas State Fair Sept. 5-14, and is available throughout the year at K-State Research and Extension county and district offices and on the Kansas 4-H website: www.Kansas4-H.

More information about 4-H activities and events at the Kansas State Fair are available at: www.kansas statefair.com.

Agronomist gives tips for wheat planted at non-optimal times

In a perfect world, all wheat would be planted at the ideal time. But several factors can cause producers to plant wheat either earlier or later than the recommended time - including grazing intentions, weather delays, and late row crop harvest, said said Kansas State University agronomist Doug Shoup.

"Wheat yield potential is greatest in south central Kansas when planted between Sept. 25 and Oct. 20, and in southeast Kansas when planted between Oct. 5 and Oct. 25," said Shoup, who is the southeast area crops and soils specialist with K-State Research and

When wheat is planted earlier than that, the plants often produce too many fall tillers, he said. The result is an increase in competition between plants, which reduces the number spikes and overall yield in the spring. In addition to tiller competition, wheat planted early generally has a higher incidence of insects and disease.

"Hessian fly, aphids, and wheat curl mites are more likely to invade earlier-planted wheat, causing damage and vectoring viral diseases such as barley yellow dwarf and wheat streak mosaic," Shoup said. In that situation, management practices should be adjusted somewhat.

best management practice against insects and disease is to select resistant varieties with good yield potential," he added. "Systemic insecticide seed treatments may provide a benefit against some insects and the viral diseases they vector; however, these can be costly and are an added expense if insects are not present.

On the other extreme, if planting is delayed past the optimal window, the yield potential also will likely be reduced unless

"If planting early, the the growing conditions are favorable. Planting later in the season will reduce the number of highly productive fall and productive spring tillers, reducing the overall yield potential, the agronomist

If planting later than optimal, producers should increase their seeding rate to account for the limited time for fall tiller production by individual plants, over any printed matter.

Shoup added. Planting extremely late, into the winter, is not recommended as yield potential will likely be very limited unless growing conditions are favorable, he said.

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crotts

The corn market failed to build on the past two week's gains. We had a strong start on Monday, but sold off from there. The corn market made several attempts to rally during the week, but failed each time. The same could be said for a number of commodities and for the Dollar Index this week. Fundamentally we have declining crop conditions, a late maturing crop, and a large area of below normal precipitation. That is offset by global economic uncertainty, an erratic crude oil market, and signs of strength in the US Dollar. This week the outside influences seemed to win out as the December corn lost 22 cents, but as we get into September and October when we see our normal seasonal lows I think the talk will begin to shift to USDA overestimating vield and the need for more acres next year. There seems to be a lot of talk from a lot of areas about less than perfect corn. We are far from any kind of crop disaster, but it seems that with all the small problems like late planting, late maturity, and dry weather it will be hard to reach the second highest yield ever. I may be wrong, but it seems that we are setting up for a repeat of the past couple years when we make our normal harvest low and then make a significant rally from there as traders refocus on corn specific fundamentals.

The wheat market was the downside leader last week. It seemed like all news was bad news and the December KW lost about 83 cents. All the talk was about rain in Australia and Argentina and better production estimates out of various parts of Europe. We also had a poor export sales report for the first time in quite a while, so there just wasn't much positive news to point to. Important areas of chart support failed this week and we have made six consecutive lower lows. The December KW looks like it is headed back to the August lows near the $8.10 level. I don't see a lot of reason for this, but if the corn and soybeans can't hold gains and we can't get any positive news in the wheat the trend will stay down for a while longer. It is highly unlikely that the December KW moves below $8.00 because we do need to be buying acres after all, but respect the trend. This is a good place to own call options, but don't get over zealous until we are back above the 50-day moving average.

Soybeans held on better than anything else last week. The November contract only lost 3 cents. There is very clear resistance in the November beans at the $13.70 level, which the market struggled with twice this week, but there is also strong support just above $13.00. The beans have the most to lose from dry weather or an early freeze in the Corn Belt and that has traders nervous. It is hard to be a seller when you realize that we are very close to seeing 100 million bushel ending stocks and $20.00 soybeans. Mother Nature needs to cooperate to give the soybeans a good finish to the crop year, but so far it isn't happening. Export sale were nothing to brag about last week. The beans had net cancellations for the third week in a row, but we are still over the yearly estimate. We still have one full week and one partial week of sales reports to go before the crop year is over and we should be able to keep the sales total high enough that USDA won't cut the old crop export estimate. There may be a reduction in the old crop crush estimate in the September crop report because those figures continue to be below expectations, but we really could use a bit more of a cushion in the new crop supply and demand tables, as it is very likely that USDA is underestimating new crop demand. Don't make any cash sales at this level. If you have to make sales, buy calls. I would prefer to be closer to $14.00 before looking at put options again. Cash cattle traded at $99 this week, but the August LC went off the board at $101.775. Our politicians would call that a lack of convergence. That or we have a lack of deliverable cattle. Maybe they are all too big. Anyway it is interesting when the futures go off the board nearly $3 over the cash market. The boxed beef market was flat this week too. The only thing that lost ground was the futures. October LC lost about $1.60 and the October FC lost about $1.55. Both of these markets are due for a correction. The charts don't look all that great so I would say we need to look to sell strength. A move up to $105.50 in October LC looks like a good spot to sell.

Beginners grazing school Sept. 24-26

Instructors at the management-intensive grazing school at the University of Missouri Forage Systems Research Center (FSRC) must remain flexible in their teaching, says Craig Roberts, MU forage agronomist.

"This year we will talk a lot about dealing with an excess of forage growth in a rotational grazing system," Roberts said. "Last year, we talked a lot about grazing in a drought year."

The school, Sept. 24-26, at the MU research farm in Linn County will cover basics of rotational grazing. Instructors are MU Extension specialists from Columbia and rangeland conservationists from the USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS).

They will be joined by panels of producers who use management-intensive grazing in their livestock operations. The school includes both classroom sessions and pasture exercises at FSRC and a nearby farm, said David Davis, superintendent at FSRC.

The schools are coordinated by Roberts for MU Extension and Mark Kennedy of NRCS with funding from the Missouri Forage and Grasslands Council and the Grazing Lands Conservation Initiative.

In an opening exercise, participants will learn how much pasture to allocate for a set of steers. Then they will be given portable fencing, posts and rolls of poly tape to build electric fencing around a day's grazing.

"The school is very practical, hands-on work," Roberts said.

On the first day, the topics covered by Extension specialists include grazing economics, nutrient cycling, forage selection, livestock and weed control. The field exercise includes soil sampling and estimating forage quality and yield.

The next day, participants check how well they allocated forages for their steers the first day — and then try again.

On the second day, NRCS conservations will teach "graziers arithmetic" and tell how to develop a grazing plan for a farm. The specialists will discuss how to match forage supply to animal needs. A grazing system can be adjusted for drought or wet years. The last part of the school is devoted to developing a real plan for a real farm. Participants will divide into teams to draw paddock arrangements on field maps of a farm.

Research at FSRC has shown that carrying capacity on a pasture can be doubled with managed grazing. Participants are encouraged to bring aerial maps of their own farms for discussion.

Fee for the three-day session is $250 per person or $375 per couple. That includes the updated Missouri Grazing Manual and other handouts, plus three lunches and two suppers.

Reservations are taken first-come and limited to 50 people.

To enroll, contact Joetta Roberts at mfgc@mchsi.com or (573) 499-0886.

To reach FSRC, go west from Brookfield, Mo., on U.S. Highway 36, then north six miles on Highway FF to Genoa Road. Go west 1.5 miles to the headquarters. Signs are at the intersections.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Ground alfalfa movement: Southwest/South Central Tonnage: 11,639/4,139 Last week: 10,983/4,345 Last year: 12,799/3,501 Hay trade is moderate. Demand is strong for dairy and grinding alfalfa, moderate for alfalfa pellets, prairie hay and stock cow quality hay. Recent rains and cooler temperatures have the alfalfa looking great, however many producers are seeing a need for rain to keep it growing. Prairie hay producers continue to work on the 2008 crop, a few are finishing up. The hay is stemming but the quality is acceptable when it is baled without being rained on. If you have hay for sale or pasture to rent or need hay or grazing, use the service of the Hay and Pasture Exchange website: www.kfb.org/hayandpasture/default.htm

USDA announces proposed rule for down cattle

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) recently announced a proposed rule to amend the Federal meat inspection regulations to initiate a complete ban on the harvest of cattle that nonambulatory after initial inspection by Food Safety and Inspection Service (FSIS) inspection program personnel.

This proposed rule follows the May 20 announcement by Secretary of Agriculture Ed Schafer to remove the provision that states that FSIS inspection program will determine the disposition of cattle that become nonambulatory disabled after they have passed ante-mortem, before harvest, inspection on a case-by-case basis. Under the proposed rule, all cattle that are nonambulatory disabled at any time prior to harvest, including those that become nonambulatory disabled after passing antemortem inspection, will be condemned and properly disposed of.

plv. eliminate further misunderstanding of the rule and, ultimately, to make a positive impact on the humane handling of cattle, I believe it is sound policy to simplify this matter by initiating a complete ban on the slaughter of downer cattle," said Agriculture Secretary Ed Schafer. On July 13, 2007, FSIS published the final rule, "Prohibition of the Use of Specified Risk Materials for Human Food and Requirements for the Disposition of Non-Ambulatory Disabled Cattle; Prohibition of the Use of Certain Stunning Devices Used To Immobilize Cattle During (SRM final Slaughter," rule). The SRM final rule allowed a case-by-case reinspection of cattle to address the rare situations where an animal that is deemed by FSIS as fit for human food at ante-mortem inspection subsequently suffers an acute injury.

Under the proposed rule, cattle that become nonambulatory disabled from an acute injury after

785-747-7210

will no longer be eligible to proceed to harvest as "U.S. Suspects." Instead, FSIS inspectors will tag these cattle as "U.S. condemned" and prohibit these animals from proceeding to harvest. Establishments will be required to notify FSIS personnel when cattle become disabled after passing antemortem inspection. Of the nearly 34 million cattle that were harvested in 2007, less than 1,000 cattle that were reinspected were actually approved by the veterinarian for harvest

Comments on this proposed rule must be received on or before Sept. 29. Comments can be sent to Docket Clerk, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Food Safety and Inspection Service, Room 2534 South Agriculture Building, 1400 Independence Avenue S.W., Washington, D.C. 20250; e-mailed to fsis.regulation scomments@fsis.usda.gov.

Effective grass waterways need regular maintenance

Producing a good crop demands a lot of attention during the growing season. producers landowners shouldn't overlook the maintenance needs of grass waterways and other conservation practices, either, said DeAnn Presley, Kansas State University Research and Extension soil management spe-

"Grass waterways are an important part of a farm's overall soil conservation plan," Presley said. They are permanent strips of grass seeded in areas of cropland where water concentrates or flows off a field

In addition to seeing tractors of all col-

Doris and her enthusiasm will be missed.

"The purpose of the waterway is to carry runoff water from a field. The grass prevents the water from forming a gully and traps some sediment. In addition, the vegetation absorbs some of the chemicals and nutrients in the runoff water, and provides habitat for small animals and birds," she said.

Like other conservation structures, grass waterways must be maintained in order to function properly. Presley recommended these practices for maintaining grass waterways:

Lift equipment out of the ground and shut off spray equipment when crossing the waterway. Encourage commercial applicators to do the same. If bare spots appear, reseed with sodforming grasses.

Do not use the waterway as a roadway. Tracks can turn into gullies in single, intense rain events.

Do not overgraze or allow livestock trails to form. These can quickly turn into gullies. If gullies form, fill, reshape, and reseed. Contact the local Natural Resource Conservation Service (NRCS) field office for recommendations on grass species to plant.

Fertilize cool-season grasses regularly at a rate of 30 to 40 pounds nitrogen per acre between November and mid-March. Many producers fertilize their grass waterways when they topdress wheat.

Mow periodically, but don't mow between April 20 and July 15 when birds are nesting. It's important to mow grass because it encourages the formation of a dense sod. Shorter, thick grass is more effective at trapping sediment than taller grass as tall grass will lay over in an intense rain event. Be careful not to till into the edges of the waterway. Avoid end rows planted parallel along the waterway, because they may allow gullies to form on the waterway edge.
