Online program allows producers to learn at home

When Minnesota farmer Bruce Wichmann signed up for a four-month Kansas State University program to hone his production and business skills, he wasn't sure what to expect from the online course.

What he got, said Wichmann, was an array of resources, personal interaction with internationallyknown agricultural economists and the opportunity to discuss issues affecting his operation with others facing similar challenges.

Wichmann, who is the owner and operator of Greywolf Farms in Fairfax, Minn., was part of K-State's 2007-2008 Management, Analysis and Strategic Thinking Program. The MAST program is open to agricultural producers throughout the United States who want to sharpen their management skills and plan for the future.

K-State is now enrolling participants for the next MAST class. The Webbased program, which begins Nov. 11-12, 2008, is open to all agricultural producers, according to Alicia Goheen, MAST program coordinator.

While the program kicks off with a session on K-State's Manhattan campus, the majority of the learning is done at home through modules accessed on the Internet, Goheen said. Topics covered during the program include: Land Ownership and Leasing; Machinery Ownership and Leasing;

Financial Analysis; Human Resources; Tax Management and Policy; Risk Management; and Marketing.

At the November orientation, class members will be introduced to the MAST program's online technology and will meet the MAST instructors and other participants, Goheen said.

"Participants then head home to begin working on the distance learning portion of MAST," she said. "The nice part about this is that producers can work through the modules on his undergraduate degree their own schedule whether that's before the work day gets started or in the evening when work and family activities are winding down."

The modules will be completed by Feb. 9-10, 2009, when participants gather again in Manhattan for a wrap-up and graduation.

Wichmann, who runs a 600-acre row crop operation, said it was helpful to him to discuss issues with class participants from Kansas and other states and the MAST instructors.

"One of our instructors was (risk management specialist) Art Barnaby. He'd just come back from testifying in Washington, D.C. to a Senate ag panel," Wichmann said, adding that because of the small class size, he became better acquainted with the MAST instructors than he was able to become acquainted with faculty while studying for at North Dakota State University.

William Bruce Springer of St. Louis, Mo. also was part of the 2007-08 MAST program. A retired attorney, Springer owns farmland in Saline County, Kansas and now is able to manage the landowner interest in the property.

"For one thing, I'm committed now to serious strategic planning and I'm planning the work, working the plan, all the time. For another, the section of the (MAST) program about land leasing was full of principles that I refer to frequently in matters of landowner- operator relations," Springer said.

More information and registration materials can be found on K-State's MAST Web site: http:// www.agmanager.info/MAST or by contacting Goheen at (785) 532-4434 or agoheen@ agecon.ksu.edu.

Shilo Schaake, Westmoreland, led out the top market steer shown during the 2008 Grand Drive held recently in Hutchinson. Judge for the show was Jeff Sargent.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Ground alfalfa movement: Southwest/South Central Tonnage: 12,229/4,567 Last week: 12,174/5,343 Last year: 12,193/3,553 Hay trade is moderate. Demand is strong for dairy and grinding alfalfa, moderate for alfalfa pellets, prairie hay and stock cow quality hay. Rain has returned to most of Kansas, heavy in places, even flooding. Western Kansas amounts are very light. The cloudy, wet weather has hung on long enough to cause concern for crops. Many row crops and the alfalfa need sunshine and heat units to reach their potential. Prairie hay producers are still struggling to finish putting up the 2008 crop. Alfalfa supplies are tight and in strong hands, grass hay supplies are more plentiful. Army worms are showing up and should be watched especially in new stands of alfalfa. If you have hay for sale or pasture to rent or need hay or grazing, use the services of the Hay and Pasture Exchange website: www.kfb.org/hayandpasture/default.htm

Market volatility makes good marketing strategies crucial

Ethanol for fuel has helped bring high profits to crop producers, but nearrecord prices for corn have downside: Increased volatility and risk to farms, said a University of Missouri Extension agricultural economist.

"The use of corn for ethanol crept along a couple years ago, and then it blossomed, along with corn prices," said economist Ray Massey of the MU Extension Commercial Agri-culture Program. "What we're seeing is a new driver in the corn market. When corn is used for fuel production, its price will fluctuate with the price of fuel, which is very volatile." Massey discussed market volatility and how high profits lead to high-risk marketing at the recent field day at MU Graves-Chapple Farm, near Corning, Mo.

"In economics, markets abhor a profit," Massey said. "They won't allow to zero through price increases in all the factors of production, such as seed. fertilizer, labor, management or fixed assets."

Profits will go toward zero first for ethanol producers, then for crop producers, and eventually for input suppliers and landowners, he said. Fertilizer and chemical costs historically have fluctuated and may come down as corn production profits erode, but seed and land prices haven't come down as easily in the past. "It's going to be a painful transition."

In July and August, the price of corn fluctuated by $1.50 per bushel, Massey said. "This is abnormal, but it occurred because of the new player in the market of what we demand of corn."

High prices have helped growers, but margins are tight because of soaring input costs, Massey said. "I don't know of any crop farmers who haven't made profits to stay. They will go a profit, but we still have a every $1 of current debt, a lot of farmers calling with concerns."

> Increased volatility is due in part to investors injecting cash into crop commodities, Massey said. "The bubble-burst cycle went from technology to real estate to commodities and not just corn and soybeans, but fuel."

> A lot of money going into something too fast inflates prices. "At some point, the market realizes the price went too high too fast, and it bursts." With high volatility in markets, vigilant risk management is crucial. In assessing the financial strength of farms, banks look at what's called the current ratio, which compares assets and liabilities to determine if a business has the resources to pay its debts over the next 12 months.

> "Make sure your current ratio is at least 1.5 or 2.0 or higher," he said. A current ratio of 2.0 means that for grower has $2 in current as-

Grain in the bin would be a current asset, he explained. "You may put grain in the bin and think it's worth $5 per bushel, but then it drops to $4." Keeping the current ratio high will help guard against price volatility, he said.

Growers also should think in terms of cash reserves. "It's costing twice as much for seed and fertilizer, but do you have twice as much cash reserves?"

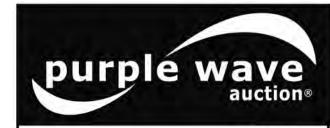

Risk-management strategies employed by farmers include securing a forward price from the local grain elevator. In forward pricing, buyer and seller agree on the price of a commodity before it has been produced. This protects farmers from a sharp drop in crop prices, though it also commits them to the forward price even if prices in fact go up. Farmers can similarly guard against sudden increases in some production costs. "There are opportunities for forward-purchasing inputs right now," Massey said. "You take a risk, but what you get rid of is the fluctuation."

Communicating with bankers, input suppliers and grain buyers is also important. "If a farmer is unable to get the local elevator to forward-price his grain, he may take out a futures position," he said. But the futures position means the farmer is subject to margin calls that affect his cash requirements

"If a farmer takes on a margin call himself and doesn't communicate with his banker, the banker may hesitate when asked for cash to cover the margin call that is protecting your grain price," he said.

Organic cropping systems workshop and farm tour set for October 2 a.m.-4:30 p.m. is the date and time for a workshop and farm tour titled "Integrating Management Strategies for Sustainable Cropping Systems." The workshop, which will include information on cover crops, long-term legume based crop rotations, and organic or "natural" systems, will be held at the Buzz Café in Sabetha, in the morning followed by a tour of Hartter Feed and Seed and the organic farm of Eugene Edelman of Sabetha.

The sessions will cover management practices that can be useful strategies for improving a farm's profits while offering conservation benefits. These practices and others can reduce purchased input use, erosion, and agricultural chemical runoff, and can also provide unique market oppor-

The program will focus on how these practices can help farmers reduce costs of production, meet water quality and conservation goals, develop a new market niche, and weather the challenges in today's agriculture. The program and tour are open to Extension, NRCS, and WRAPS (Watershed Restoration and Protection Strategy) representatives, and farmers.

The workshop and tour are part of a series of similar programs being held in North Dakota, South Dakota, Nebraska and Kansas, to educate Extension and voag educators, NRCS and others about management practices common to sustainable agriculture and organic farming. Supported by a grant from USDA's Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education Program through the University of Nebraska, cosponsors include the North Central Region SARE Program, University of Nebras-

Local alpaca farm celebrates "National Alpaca Farm Days"

On September 27-28, alpaca breeders from across the United States and Canada will invite the public to come to their farm or ranch to meet their alpacas. From 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday and 1-4 p.m. Sunday, Cedar Breaks Farm will welcome guests. The farm is located at 3990 West 69th Avenue, Manhattan, or 1.5 miles north of Anderson Ave., near Keats.

Alpacas, cousins to the llama, are native to the Andean Mountain range of South America, particular-Peru, Bolivia, and Chile

Alpacas were first imported into the United States in 1984. Since then, the alpaca industry has grown steadily, according to the Alpaca Owners and Breeders Association (AOBA), the backbone of the alpaca industry. Current estimates total over 120,000 registered alpacas with the Alpaca Registry, Inc. (ARI) in the United States and more than 4,000 AOBA members in North America.

Because of its soft texture, alpaca fiber is sometimes compared to cashmere. Making the fiber even more coveted, it has the lus-

Grant program, webcast can help ag producers try new ideas Innovative Kansas farmers and ranchers got $26,064 last year in grant funds to implement new and sustainable ideas to improve their operations.

Application forms are now available again for the 2008 grant funds available through the U.S. Department of Agriculture's North Central Region Sustainable Agriculture Research and Education Program. All producer proposals are due in the NCR-

SARE office by Dec. 1.

To help Kansans review the program's requirements and discuss grant-writing basics, the Kansas SARE program and the Kansas Center for Sustainable Agriculture and Alternative Crops — both based at Kansas State University are sponsoring an online, evening seminar Sept. 22.

The webcast size is limited to the first 40 people who register. Participants can take part via telephone conference call or on the Web.

Interested applicants should contact Kansas SARE Coordinator Jana Beckman at (785) 532-1440 or beckman@ksu.edu

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crotts

In the September crop report the USDA reduced the corn and soybean production estimate a little more than expected. The corn yield estimate was cut to 153.2 bu/ac and the soybean yield was cut to 40 bu/ac. There is some fear now that there will be further cuts in the production estimates in the October report. The perception of the marketplace is changing and traders may start to wonder how small the crop is going to get. Attitudes like that can turn the trend in the corn and beans back up.

Two things that will have to happen in order for the grains to rally is the fund liquidation we have been hearing about will have to come to an end and the strength in the US Dollar will have to at least let up. The Dollar was very weak on Friday, which may be an indication that we will see a correction. A pause in the Dollar strength will allow traders to refocus on fundamentals and also ease fears of further commodity liquidation. We have seen a sharp rally in the Dollar, but the Dollar is by no means strong from a historical stand point, so the recent strength has probably done more psychological damage than anything else.

With Friday's move higher the December corn moved from about 15 cents lower on the week to 15 cents higher. For the moment it looks like we have avoided a retest of the August low and it looks like the corn has at least made a temporary bottom.

There will be strong overhead resistance at the $5.70 area in the December contract, but if the market can move through that, the next long term objective will be a move back up to the $6.50 area. Tight stocks and the need for more acres next year will be very supportive for the rest of the year.

The wheat is our downside leader. The December KW lost 35 1/2 cents and about the only thing positive to say is that we didn't make a new low for the move on Friday. So far, Thursday's low of $7.54 1/2 is acting as support, and one could say that the market is consolidating. The market is over-

Yard & Garden Tips By Gregg Eyestone

Grasses for Your Landscape

Landscape grasses are starting to come into their prime. Our maiden grass variety Miscanthus sinensis "Graziella" is starting to bloom. It will be followed by the variety "Gracillimus." These warm-season grasses take over the show from the cool-season grasses like the "Karl Foerster" Feather Reed Grass that bloomed earlier this season.

If grasses are of interest to you and they should be, I'm holding two opportunities to explore them. The first is Wednesday, Sept. 17 at the Manhattan Public Library located at 629 Poyntz. We will be in the auditorium. This is the first in a series of Lunch and Learn sessions that the Riley County, K-State Research and Extension office has planned for the next five months. Bring your lunch or just you and your friends and we will get started at 12:15 and finish before 1 p.m.

the following Wednesday on Sept. 24 around noon. This time I will be at the KSU Gardens at 1500 Denison Avenue and meet in the visitor center. If it is raining, we will go through the slides used on the 17th. We will hope that it is good weather and walk and talk about the grasses growing at the gardens.

These types of grasses are great landscape plants. They grow fast, have no serious pests, use little fertilizer and can be drought tolerant. This is what everyone is looking for in a landscape plant.

Karl Forester Feather Reed grass is the perennial of the year for Kansas. It is an upright, cool-season grass that tolerates Kansas growing conditions. Being a coolseason grass, it can be planted now.

A new grass for our land-

The second opportunity is scape is called Gold Bar Zebra Grass. It is a Miscanthus like our other two. This plant has creamy-yellow bands on the foliage which is twice as much as Zebra Grass. It really stands out in our landscape.

> These landscape grasses are great for our Kansas home landscapes. If you can't make it to one of these programs, you can download the KSU Gardens walking tour publication. Go to www.riley.ksu.edu/ and under announcements is the link to the publication.

> If you would like additional information on a horticulture topic, please contact Gregg Eyestone at the Riley County office of K-State Research and Extension. Gregg may be contacted by calling 537-6350 or stopping by 110 Courthouse Plaza in Manhattan or e-mail: geyeston@ ksu.edu.

Remove, destroy dead lilac canes, says horticulture expert

If lilac shrub canes wilt and die in late summer, that's often a sign lilac borers have been at work for months.

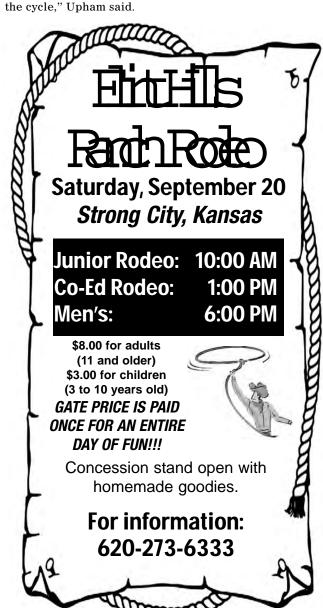

"By then, it's too late to spray to control this year's borers. About all you can do is to remove and destroy the dead canes. That will help reduce next year's borer populations," said Ward Upham, Master Gardener program coordinator for Kansas State University Research and Exten-

Lilac borer adults are a type of clear-winged moth that looks a lot like a wasp, Upham said. The exact time varies, but these adults emerge between late spring and early summer. The females then lay their eggs on lilac stems. When the larvae hatch, they bore right into the shrub.

'Often, the only early clue that borer larvae have infested your shrub is a sawdust-like material called frass. It shows up around the base of stems, after being pushed out of the hole that a borer's made," he said.

The larvae spend winter inside their dead lilac cane. They pupate the following spring, usually during April, and then emerge to fly, mate and lay eggs.

"So, if you remove their dead canes now, you can break

Read fine print on lawn seed labels to ensure success

Not all lawn grass seed is created equal.

Different seed suppliers' bags or boxes may say they hold the exact same turf species and variety. But, that may not be the whole truth. Those containers can also include trace contaminants — unwanted seeds.

"That's one of the reasons grass seed prices vary so widely. Often, you really are getting what you pay for," said Ward Upham, horticulturist with Kansas State University Research and Extension.

By law, lawn seed packages must list any weed and/or "other crop" seeds that are along for the ride, he said. The label must list these unneeded contents as a percentage by weight, not number of seeds. So, a small percentage by weight can still mean lots and lots of "other crop" seeds, so long as they're tiny.

"Naturally, for weed seed content you want as close to zero as you can find," Upham said. "In comparison, 'other crop' seed may sound fairly harmless. But, that depends on what the other crop is and on the type of lawn you want. Typically, good quality seed should have 0.01 percent 'other crop' or less.'

The definition for "other crop" is any grass species that's planted and grown for some purpose. It could be an ornamental grass, pasture grass, orchard grass or a different species of turf-

"The label won't list what it is, though, unless it makes up 5 percent or more of the contents," he said. "Of course, the unknown contaminant could be something fairly harmless, such as a perennial ryegrass in a tall fescue package. But, it also could be something bad — for example, a weedy looking, grassy perennial that you can't get rid of without killing your whole lawn."

Upham warned that in recent years, K-State's turf specialists have been seeing more and more lawn seed for sale that's contaminated with two bad "other crops":

Orchardgrass, which typically contaminates tall fescue seed, most often the relatively inexpensive K-31 variety. Orchardgrass produces clumps that are faster growing, lighter green, and more coarsely textured than Kansas turf varieties. It literally sticks out like a sore thumb, Upham said.

Rough bluegrass — also known as Poa trivialis or just Poa triv — which usually arrives as an unnoticed contaminate of Kentucky bluegrass. Despite its common name, rough bluegrass is actually fine- textured. It also forms circular patches that blend in fairly well until summer heat arrives. Then, it rapidly turns brown, but that usually means it's gone dormant and will live to green up again and again.

"Less than one-half of a percent of either of these palette," said Chip Miller horticulturist with Kansas State University Research and Extension.

One of the most promising he's field-tested in Saline County is the Chinese chaste tree (Vitex negundo or Vitex agnus-castus). This fast- growing, open and airy plant is also commonly known as the hemp tree, Mexican lavender, poor man's lilac and monks pep-

Miller said its popular names point to some of the factors that make Vitex interesting:

The tiny blooms are fragrant and grouped in purple to lilac spikes that are shaped much like a butterfly bush's panicles. They can create a spectacular show in midsummer. They also attract numerous bees and butterflies, as well as become long-lasting cut flowers.

Some companies now process the plant's aromatic, dark-brown to black seeds into a "women's herb."

But, today's gardeners should deadhead the spent flowers, the horticulturist said. Letting a Vitex go to seed zeroes its odds for a second bloom, plus can turn the plant into a weedy
