

Pay attention to details, including calving rates, to reap profits from beef herd

By Kris Ringwall

The fall of the year is the time to make herd evaluations and managerial and nutritional improvements without fighting the weather. The key to understanding the overall performance of a herd is reproduction.

For example, the calving distribution of the herd is very important because delayed calving costs pounds. The calving distribution indicates how many cows calved within each 21-day period of the calving season.

The actual number of pounds lost due to later calving is critical. By viewing the average calf weight by 21-day calving periods, this lost income potential actually can be traced.

For example, let’s compare two herds of cattle that calved in 2008 and restrict our discussion only to those cows that calved during the first, second or third 21-day period of the calving season. The first herd (herd A) has 186 calves during this 63-day period with 74.7 percent of the cows calving in the first 21 days. In other words, the cows bred well. The larger second herd (herd B) has 256 calves during this 63-day period, but only 42.5 percent of the cows calved during the first 21 days.

Is there a difference in these two herds? Obviously herd A is a tighter, more reproductively responsive herd. So what does this mean? One could evaluate actual weaning weight. However, even before overall improvement in calf weaning weight is discussed, a more serious problem is the pounds of weaning weight given up due to later calving.

In herd A, the more reproductively responsive herd, those calves born during the second 21 days of the calving season are 42 pounds lighter than those born during the first 21 days of the calving cycle. Those born during the third 21 days of the calving season are 86 pounds lighter than those born during the first 21 days.

In herd B, the herd with a more spread-out calving season, those calves born during the second 21 days of are 41 pounds lighter than those born during the first 21 days. Those born during the third 21 days of the calving cycle are 88 pounds lighter than those born during the first 21 days.

I realize that not all the calves can be born during the first 21 days of the cycle. However, the degree of effort put forth to keep cows calving early in your chosen calving season needs to be proportional to the amount of weight lost in the lighter calves. Regardless of herd A or B, both herds are giving up more than 40 pounds for every calf delayed into the second cycle and almost 90 pounds into the third cycle.

Adding this weight loss to the number of calves in each cycle, herd A gave up 1,680 pounds on 40 calves born during the second 21 days of the calving season, while herd B gave up a whopping 4,551 pounds on the 111 calves born during the second 21 days.

If one looks at calves born during the third 21 days of the calving season, herd A gave up 602 pounds on seven calves and herd B gave up an additional 3,168 pounds on 36 calves. Adding up the weight loss, herd A lost 2,282 pounds or 1,231 pounds per hundred calves, while herd B lost 7,719 pounds of calf or 3,045 pounds per hundred cows. Granted, the younger, lighter calves may bring more dollars per pound to help offset some of the losses, but they don’t bring more dollars per head.

However, the overriding principle is one of pressure in a herd to keep the cows calving early with respect to the desired calving season. Each producer sets his or her calving date for the type of cows he or she wants to raise and then needs to review the herd’s reproductive performance utilizing the calving distribution.

If you’re not satisfied, evaluate the cows, check the condition score and take steps to start improving the most likely problem, which is cow nutrition. Doing it next spring after calving is too late. See your nutritionist because four tons of calf is not easy to give up.

STARTING 10:00 A.M. ON CULL COWS

FOLLOWED BY STOCKER FEEDERS — 11:00 A.M.

We had some high quality calves offered for our sale Friday, Oct. 9. and they were finding a good demand. Unweaned calves, calves without pre-weaning shots and lower quality calves were showing resistance. Feeder steers and heifers were in short supply and were selling at steady prices. Cull cows sold fully steady on a light offering.

Butler to dedicate refurbished agriculture facilities October 19

On Oct. 19 Butler Community College will welcome Acting Secretary of the Kansas Department of Agriculture Josh Svaty as the college celebrates the completion of its updated agriculture facilities.

The public is invited to attend the ceremony and to tour the renovated building. With a nationally acclaimed livestock judging team, the nearly $1.2 million renovations are providing current and future ag students with a new barn and storage space, additional classrooms space, student gathering space with wireless internet technology, new furnishings and state-of-the-art technology.

"The addition of classrooms, learning laboratory/flex space, and cutting-edge technology is a very valuable resource in providing the ideal setting where students can learn skills and abilities that fit their agriculture educational goals and instructors can deliver opportunities in the Butler agriculture programs in a comfortable and safe environment," said Don Gronau, lead agriculture instructor.

Coupled with a no-interest loan allocated by the Kansas Board of Regents, the Butler Foundation took the lead on securing funds to make the changes possible.

Appointed by Governor Mark Parkinson in July 2009, Secretary Svaty will be on hand to commemorate the conclusion of the construction and grand opening of the new facilities. Svaty will speak at the facility 4:30 p.m.

"Agriculture as we know it is undergoing vast change. This challenge begins with education, and Butler's significant investment in this beautiful facility demonstrates that it is committed to playing a key role in that education," Svaty said. "Tomorrow's ag producers and employers will demand a smarter, more resilient workforce."

Tours will be available from 4 to 6 p.m. on Oct. 19. The formal program begins at 4:30.

To reach the facility, continue south past the main Butler campus on Haverhill Rd. Turn west at the intersection of Haverhill and Kechi Rd. (20th), just west of the refinery, and continue to the facility on the south side of the road.

Balloon glow set for Friday evening

It's without a doubt one of the most festive parts of the Balloons, Bikes, Blues & BBQ Event in Parsons. On Friday, October 17, as the sun sets, spectators are invited to gather at Tolen Creek Park (just south of US 59/400 interchange) where 10 or so balloonists will vie for their chance to be the stars of a most spectacular evening — the Balloon Glow.

Friday's event is a prelude to the big BBBB weekend. Spectators are invited to come and go after dusk to the Balloon Glow where pilots make their hot air balloons dance in the fall air. This event will take place after dark (weather permitting). To accomplish the glow, balloon pilots ignite their burners simultaneously. This causes the colorful balloons to glow against the rich Kansas skies.

Bring a lawn chair and sit across the Tolen Creek Pond and watch as the gentle giants light up the night sky.

On Saturday, October 18, join us again at Tolen Creek Park for the Balloon Launch. Weather permitting, beginning at 7:30 a.m. hot air balloons will race toward an established target for prizes. Another race will be held on Sunday morning.

For more information, call the Parsons Chamber of Commerce at (620) 421-6500.

Rural Life

Why change is hard in small towns

What does it mean to be rural? People who live in geographically isolated, low population areas where occupations are tied to natural resources have more in common with each other than they do with their fellow countryman in cities and towns of any size.

The fewness of numbers is key to understanding the peculiar dynamics of relationships and the assortment of troubles and distress rural residents experience.

Rural values. The values that underpin rural life are more family, social, religious and community-based. The social and relational parts of rural life are powerful in terms of stress and in their psychological rewards.

Rural people have lifelong relationships with relatives close by and friends who seem like family. People are judged on how good a neighbor they are. It is a major way people earn respect in a rural community.

Occupations and careers are important, but only in a larger context of social obligations and constraints. People count. Community counts.

Rituals are enacted. The cycle of life repeats itself through birth and death, summer and winter, sowing and harvesting, young and old — a never-ending succession of patterns and rhythms. One generation replaces the next.

The landscape is familiar and comforting. Family history and connection is meaningful. Local history is passed on as a part of heritage. Each person's future and family well-being are tied to place.

The "place" is alive. It is whole. It has a life of its own. It is the glue that holds things together. To be separated from place is to not belong or be a part of something important. Place is the stage upon which the drama of life is being played out.

Importance of belonging. Personal identity is drawn from the association and support of other people. Belonging and being in good standing with the group has deep meaning. Reliance on social identity is at once a strength and a weakness. The boundaries between oneself and others is more fluid and subject to pressures and threat.

Rural people accept the interplay between good and bad, accommodate themselves to the reality they see, and do what is necessary to be in harmony with their environment. They have a sense of how things fit together and how decisions affect each life.

The downside of rural life. When people are in short supply, they are recruited and "pressured" into community service. Serving in multiple roles adds to stress. The same person may serve on different civic boards or as a member of various groups.

At the same time, community members see and meet each other at church, school functions, games, stores, dealerships, card parties, weddings, funerals, community fund raisers and at the local cafes and bars. They "change hats" often and make subtle shifts in relationships depending on the roles they are playing.

How do people cope with complicated social relationships when goals and ideas come in conflict? By being "nice," that's how. Being "nice" means not rocking the boat, not engaging in

Let's put our heads together and see what we can come up with to help achieve your calf production goals using WOODEN CROSS CHAROLAIS GENETICS!

- Large number of bulls to choose from.
- We only sell 16-18 month old spring born bulls in the fall.
- Our herd is in the top 5% in the nation in regards to calving ease.
- Our bulls are developed on hay in the winter and grass in the summer preparing them for the real world of breeding cows in any environment.
- All of our bulls have run out together since the time they were weaned which has made them rugged enough to withstand even the harshest of breeding environments.

- Sound in structure, high in fertility, Wooden Cross bulls demonstrate the longevity that is needed to service large numbers of cows giving you a great return on your genetics investment.
- We only use in herd AI sires that have been proven here at Wooden Cross. Our walking bulls are the sons and grandsons of these proven sires.
- Bulls are reasonably priced which will assist you in getting your cows covered at the lowest possible cost per head.

Our Bulls Are Run Rough To Be Tough

Please contact us for a complete list of the bulls and ask us about our "CREDIT BACK" program which offers you up to $5 per head credit back on your next purchase when you sell your Wooden Cross sired calves or yearlings at Farmers and Ranchers Livestock, Salina Ks or at any other approved sale facility. Also get up to $5 credit back when you provide us with individual carcass data.

controversy and not giving strong opinions. It means papering over conflict and living with the difference.

In a word; they "stuff it." Being "nice" is the socially correct way of coexisting in a rural community. To be other than "nice" invites criticism. It isn't safe not to be nice.

Feeling out of step, judged or excluded is painful. They often live lives of hidden pain, resentments and anger because they fear the pathway to reconciliation will cause further and perhaps irreparable harm. They live with private anger and opinions which they keep to themselves. Their public face and their private thoughts don't always match up.

This isn't to say that rural communities don't have people who are genuinely kind, compassionate, non-judgmental and open with their feelings. These people don't have suppressed hostility and anger. They have a strong sense of identity. What you see is what you get. They are also nice.

Avoiding personal risks. Those who have difficulty in controlling their emotions or in resolving conflict find it easier to keep the peace. Being nice means they don't have to think, take a stand or risk rejection.

People are too interconnected to risk alienating each other or to start a feud. One blowup might last a lifetime. Everyone has vested interests. If you oppose someone strongly in one setting, he or she may block your goals in another.

Even enemies have friends. The friend of your enemy is your friend. To make an enemy is to put a strain on your friend. Strong political controversy rips apart the delicate social fabric of a rural community. People don't know how to act when lines of conflict divide the community.

Harmony is the value that makes the community work. Even if power is concentrated and public interest isn't served, it is still seems better to most people than raw, open controversy that upsets the social system. Attempts at change are more likely to go through indirect means such as gossip and social ostracism.

It is easy to stick your head in the sand and ignore injustice, abuse of power or harm to the public good. Calling attention to the problem will ruffle somebody's feathers. Going along to get along perpetuates the status quo.

Change is hard in rural communities because of the inertia created by the need for social harmony. Personal integrity takes courage because it comes with a cost.

Greensburg to receive $17.4 million wind farm loan

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. Agriculture Secretary Tom Vilsack says the government will loan a Greensburg business $17.4 million to build 10 wind turbines.

Vilsack says the turbines will provide power to Greensburg, which is trying to rebuild as an environmentally friendly town since being nearly destroyed by a tornado in 2007.

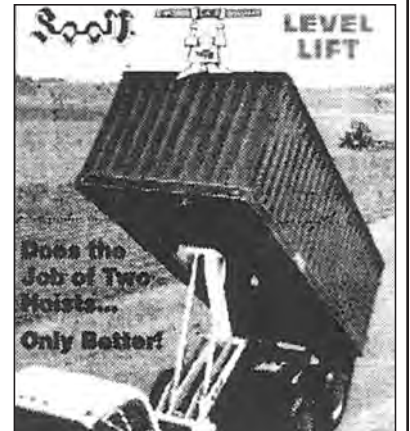

The project's total cost is estimated at $23.3 million. The U.S. Department of Agriculture will loan about $17.4 million to Greensburg Wind Farm, LLC, a subsidiary of John Deere Renewables.

The remaining $5.8 million will come from an equity investment by Deere & Company.

The 10 wind turbines are expected to produce 12.5 megawatts of electricity that will serve Greensburg and other rural communities through the Kansas Power Pool.

Freeze stops crop growth, but cool weather slowed maturity earlier

First freeze of the fall ends the growing season for crops, but extended cool weather before frost may have stopped crop maturity early, said a University of Missouri Extension agronomist.

“The science of low temperatures and photosynthesis is not perfect, but we expect some reduced yields in both soybean and corn fields because of unusual fall weather,” said Bill Wiebold, MU Extension soybean and corn specialist.

When temperatures fall below 40 degrees, little growth occurs. Photosynthesis slows and then stops with low temperatures and reduced day length. Photosynthesis is the chemical process in which chlorophyll in plants converts carbon dioxide and water into starches and sugars for seed fill.

Plants can survive frost at 32 degrees, but a hard freeze at 28 degrees kills most plants. Freezing temperatures can vary across a landscape, with colder temperatures in low-lying areas and north-facing slopes. Lack of wind increases chance of killing freeze.

As of Oct 7, frost from 32-degree temperatures had occurred in much of northwest Missouri. However, no 28-degree temperatures, the killing freeze, were reported, said Pat Guinan, climatologist with the MU Extension Commercial Agriculture Program. Those killing temperatures did occur just across the state line in Iowa and Kansas.

Long-range forecasts call for killing freeze on Sunday, Oct 11. “There is even the possibility of snow in far northern Missouri,” Guinan said. “However, snow should be light and not accumulate on warm soils.”

“Unfortunately, we are not getting the late freeze that we had last year,” Wiebold said. “In 2008, a long, warm fall season helped yields.”

Guinan said the median date for a freeze is Oct. 11-16 in counties across far northern Missouri. In most of Missouri the median freeze date is Oct. 16-21. Counties in extreme southwest Missouri and the Bootheel have median freezes from Oct. 26 to Nov. 1.

Delayed planting last spring because of cool, rainy weather put more crops at risk of delayed maturity. Some crops, normally up and growing in springtime, were not planted until after the first day of summer.

Crop observers have noted many fields of green soybean plants late in the season this year, Wiebold said. “Near-perfect growing conditions in the fall have kept the plants alive. Usually we see the leaves turn yellow and begin to drop by early October.”

Farmers worry about whether the soybean seed pods and corn ears have filled and matured before the killing freeze, Wiebold said. Of greater concern is whether the soybean seed matured normally or remained green. Off-color beans can be docked in price at market time.

“Green soybeans don’t mature in the bin after harvest,” Wiebold added. “Immature soybean seeds contain chlorophyll and appear green. During maturity in normal fall weather, the chlorophyll breaks down and partially bleaches in sunlight. Premature death stops this degradation and the seeds remain green.”

The extent of the green-bean syndrome depends on how mature the seeds were when frozen.

“If death occurs late in the seed-filling, the green color is confined to the seed coat,” he said. “If death occurs during early to mid fill, the green color remains throughout the interior of the seed.”

Soybean buyers dock the price of green beans brought to elevators. In processing, green beans produce green soy oil, an undesirable quality for cooking.

Nearly all soybeans are classified and sold as “yellow soybeans,” Wiebold said.

Farmers can check their soybean seed by splitting them with a knife. If only the seed coat is green, the beans should be classified as yellow beans and not docked.

However, if less than 90 percent of the seed interior is yellow, the beans will be classified as "soybeans of other color."

A load of beans containing more than 10 percent seed of other color will be graded "standard" and can receive substantial dockage, he said.

Sometimes early freezing damages seed so badly that they are classified "total damage kernels," the lowest grade.

For the most part, corn has passed the critical stage of maturity called "black layer." This layer, at the base of the kernel where it attaches to the corn cob, seals the kernel off from the plant, stopping nutrient intake. At that point the corn starts to dry for harvest.

Corn killed before black layer forms can be difficult to dry, both on the stalk and in the bin.

"Delaying harvest to allow corn to dry in the field leads to increased risk of cornstalks falling over," Wiebold warned. "The wet season has increased chances for stalk rot."

Scientists study Holstein milk production and lessened fertility

Agricultural Research Service (ARS) scientists have discovered why Holsteins — bred to produce more milk — are less fertile than before breeding efforts were stepped up to increase dairy production: It's in their DNA.

Since the U.S. dairy industry intensified selective breeding efforts in the 1960s, average milk yield in Holsteins has doubled, but the cattle are less fertile. A comparison of DNA from cattle selectively bred for milk production versus cattle isolated from such practices shows a genetic link between increased yields and reduced fertility, according to researchers at the ARS Animal and Natural Resources Institute (ANRI) in Beltsville, Md.

The researchers teamed up with colleagues at the University of Minnesota (UM) to compare the genomes of modern Holsteins with those of UM cattle never exposed to the modern selective breeding practices. The lack of exposure meant that DNA from the UM cattle were genetic "time capsules" of an era before the selection efforts intensified.

ANRI geneticist John Cole and colleagues drew DNA samples from the genetic material of about 2,000 cattle, stored at the ARS National Center for Genetic Resources Preservation, the U.S. Holstein Association, and five U.S. universities, including UM. The scientists extracted DNA and genotyped the samples using the Illumina Bovine SNP50 BeadChip, a glass slide capable of obtaining genotypes for thousands of markers simultaneously. The device was developed by ARS researchers in collaboration with industry, university and other ARS partners.

By analyzing 50,000 genetic markers, the researchers found that many of the chromosomal regions associated with increased milk yield were also associated with reduced fertility rates. The results also showed that up to 30 percent of the Holstein genome may be influenced by standard breeding practices, according to Tad Sonstegard, an ANRI geneticist.

The researchers say the results will help Holstein breeders and milk producers better understand trade-offs between high yield and low fertility when selecting for more profitable dairy cattle.

Read more about this research in the October 2009 issue of Agricultural Research magazine, available online at: www.ars.usda.gov/is/AR/archive/oct09/genome1009.htm.

Use of sheep to control weeds to highlight grape growing workshop

One might wonder what sheep have to do with winemaking, but they are playing an important role for one winery in Missouri.

The use of Babydoll sheep at Jowler Creek Vineyard and Winery in Platte City, Mo., near Kansas City, will highlight the annual Nebraska Vineyard Management Workshop, Saturday, Oct. 31, at the downtown Holiday Inn in Lincoln.

Among the major expenses of running a winery are mowing grass and weed control, Read said. Jowler Creek has found that sheep help keep those expenses down. Colleen Gerke, co-owner of the winery, will be the featured speaker at the workshop. She will talk about how her winery has used Babydoll sheep to control weeds for about a year.

Cost of the workshop is $60 and reservations can be made online at Registration or by calling 800-328-2851. The registration form can be downloaded at Viticulture Program and mailed with payment to: UNL CARI, ATTN: Audrey George, 103H Miller Hall, Lincoln, NE 68583-0711. The workshop begins with registration at 8 a.m. and ends at 4:30 p.m.

An optional session on wine evaluation will be held at 6:30 p.m. on Friday, Oct. 30. This session will address the basics of understanding aroma and flavor of different wine types, Read said. Participants will sample wines from five classic red wine grapes and five classic white wine grapes, in addition to examples of Nebraska wines. The cost of this special session is $40 per person and $30 for a guest.

Additional dates, new venue for spring seedstock sales opportunity

The Kansas Beef Expo has had a long tradition in Kansas offering producers a venue to showcase and market their beef genetics. In continuing that tradition a new venue is being offered to enhance the market offering for producers. Along with the annual winter event held in Hutchinson the Kansas Beef Expo will also offer a spring event to be held in Salina on March 27th, 2010.

The spring event will offer an opportunity to producers to market breeding stock to cattlemen across the Midwest. The event will host a live cattle auction, trade show and other events focused on the cattle business. The spring event is set to be held at the Farmers and Ranchers Livestock Commission in Salina.

Plans for the 2009 Winter Expo are well under way. The Winter Beef Expo will feature a Junior Livestock Show, Show Heifer and Steer Sale and Pen Bull Show. Both events are hosted by the Kansas Beef Expo and are open to any exhibitors and producers across the nation.

For more information on either event please visit www.kansasbeefexpo.com or contact Quint Huncovsky at (785) 259-4122 or email quint@kansasbeefexpo.com.

Yard & Garden Tips

By Gregg Eyestone

Managing lawn weeds

If you mow tall, fertilize some and water when the grass needs it, you will likely have few weeds. I will testify that this has worked for me. My lawn is the best it ever has been. Besides following the K-State Research and Extension recommendations, weather has been extremely helpful.

Most Kansas lawns are made up of a cool-season grass like tall fescue with perhaps some bluegrass mixed in. These grasses are selected because they green up earlier in the spring than the warm-season types. A characteristic of cool-season grasses is that they usually brown up with the heat and reduced rainfall of the summer. That didn't happen for me this summer.

With actively growing tall fescue, there wasn't time or room for weeds to grow. The cool and sufficient rainfall of this year's growing season helped the grass keep weeds out. I was walking my lawn looking for dandelions and the start of henbit, chickweed or speedwell. Little to no signs of these or bindweed could I find that have been in my lawn.

In the past on a day when the weeds are actively growing, I have treated for these broadleaf weeds. A broadleaf herbicide spray will cover the weed leaf surface and give good control. Sprays also allow for treating areas that only have weeds while granular products are applied to the entire lawn whether it is needed or not.

If you fertilize only once a year, the weed and feed granular products would be a good fit. The leaf surface of the weeds needs to be moist so that the herbicide will stick to it. The more leaf surface the better for contact of the herbicide. Don't mow right before treating and wait a few days for it to be absorbed. After a few days, the lawn should be watered for the fertilizer to be moved into the root zone. Any fertilizer or herbicide that falls on the driveway, sidewalk or in the street needs to be swept up and put on the lawn. It becomes a pollutant on these hard surfaces and is a waste of product.

If you have some weeds, now is a good time to manage them. They become a lot tougher as they get bigger. With only a few weeds, hand digging may be a good option. Mowing tall, fertilizing and strategic watering will aid in reducing weeds. Those factors I can control. It is good to have help with cool summer temperatures and timely rains. You can find out more information on this and other horticulture topics by going to the K-State Research and Extension website at www.ksre.ksu.edu.

And you contact Gregg Eyestone at the Riley County office of K-State Research and Extension. Gregg may be contacted by calling (785) 537-6350 or stopping by 110 Courthouse Plaza in Manhattan or e-mail: geyeston@ksu.edu.

Help with turf

Central U.S. homeowners facing fall lawn chores now have an array of resources available on the Web, as well as at their local Extension office.

The turf team at Kansas State University is providing the information, gearing it to help homeowners in both planning and practice.

The place to start is <http://www.ksuturf.com/Homeowners.html>. It contains links to the basics, including a publication on planting a home lawn and another one on fertilizing it.

The page can take web users to separate publications on an array of turf species, including those that tolerate shade.

The site also takes on specialty subjects, such as how to understand soil test results and how to aerate heavy clay soils.

Kansas to harvest record corn, soybeans

WICHITA (AP) — A new government report is predicting record crops of corn and soybeans in Kansas this harvest. Sorghum yields may set a record as well.

Kansas Agricultural Statistics Service reported Friday that corn production is expected to total 561.2 million bushels. That is 8 percent more than had been forecast last month and 15 percent more than last year's crop.

Another record is forecast for Kansas soybean production. That crop is predicted to be 146 million bushels, a 21 percent increase over last year.

Grain sorghum is not setting any production records because its planted acreage is down. But its growers are still hauling in record yields of 83 bushels per acre. The agency forecasts the state will harvest 207.5 million bushels of sorghum.

Pioneer expands corn drought research; some work to be done in Manhattan

Pioneer Hi-Bred has announced the expansion of its corn drought research efforts in Manhattan and Plainview, Texas, to bring better genetics and traits that meet specific challenges facing growers.

These locations, traditionally focused on sorghum, now will be expanded to include additional research for corn drought testing. The expanded facilities will allow Pioneer to establish managed stress environments, including needed irrigation systems. Both native and transgenic traits will be evaluated and characterized at these research facilities.

"While we all wish there was a magical gene for the development of drought-tolerant hybrids, the truth is drought is a complex issue with yearly variations in the timing and intensity of water deficit and high temperature stress," says Joe Keaschall, Pioneer corn research director. "That's why Pioneer is so committed to building upon its established leadership role in drought tolerance research and has expanded its operations to meet grower needs in this area."

At the Manhattan facility, new yield test locations have been established specifically for targeted drought product development. In addition, additional infrastructure is being developed for future research.

For the Plainview, Texas facility, a breeding nursery has been established with several thousand inbreds being evaluated. Also, limited irrigation sites have been established for targeted drought yield evaluation.

Growth in 2010 at both facilities will be dedicated to the Drought I and Drought II product development initiatives. More specifically, the Drought I initiative combines native drought genes with needed traits in the most elite adapted inbreds for drought-prone areas. The Drought II initiative is focused on transgenic gene evaluation and integration into the most elite and adapted germplasm. Herbicide, insect and disease resistance will continue to be key traits for industry-leading drought hybrids.

The Manhattan and Plainview, Texas, research activities will be combined with Pioneer's drought research efforts in Garden City; LaSalle, Colo.; York, Neb.; Woodland, Calif.; and Viluco, Chile.

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crotts

The US Dollar Index fell to new lows for the move again last week and the charts suggest we will see the Dollar Index head down to the 71 area and the 2008 low. The weakness in the Dollar and the strength in the stock market seemed to benefit the commodity markets this week. The gold made a new all time high of $1060.40 in the October contract. There is a lot of fear is regards to the future of the US Dollar and the gold market has been attracting a great deal of flight to quality money.

The USDA released the October Supply and Demand report Friday. For the most part the corn numbers were not surprising, with the exception of the corn yield estimate, which came in above expectations at 164.2 bu./ac. The increase in yield was partially offset by a cut in the acreage estimate, with planted acres falling 600,000 to 86.4 million and harvested acres falling 700,000 to 79.3 million. It is amazing how long it takes USDA to recognize planting problems. Other notable changes to the corn numbers included an increase in feed and ethanol usage and a cut in the export estimate. Exports have been inconsistent and generally not good enough to justify the 2.2 billion bushel export estimate, so that change wasn't terribly shocking.

The yield increase was larger than the average trader guess, which is negative, but how USDA arrived at the higher yield is very interesting and deserves a deeper look. USDA did not increase the yield in Illinois and they only increased Iowa by 1 bushel to the acre. However, North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, and Indiana were increased by 3 bu./ac. Wisconsin was increased by 7, and Nebraska was increased by 9 bu.ac. Combined, less than 60% of the corn in these states is mature and some of it isn't even dented. All of these states, with the exception of Indiana, will have a killing frost this weekend. So the question arises, "Will USDA have to cut the yield in these states next month?" I think the answer is yes. I don't know how much damage will be done, but I think there will be some. We have reached the point that the size of the crop is no longer growing. We haven't made much harvest progress yet, so it is hard to believe a harvest low is in, but it is looking more likely that the harvest low came on September 8th. That is not to say that we won't see pressure in the market, because I think it is very likely that we revisit the 50-day moving average, which is near $3.30, but I don't think we can start to take a more bullish attitude towards the market.

The wheat numbers were nothing but bearish Friday. Higher production, lower usage, and much higher ending stocks. Ending stocks came in at 864 million bushels, which is the highest level since the 2000/2001 crop year and prices were much lower back then. It isn't pleasant when I think about a move below $3.00 in the wheat. I don't think it will happen, but we have to keep in mind that unless demand improves, stocks will likely build again next year and we really don't need more wheat. We had a good bounce in the wheat this week and technical indicators are giving buy signals, so I can't be too negative right now, but I would be very cautious with long positions. Plan on the wheat being the short leg of spreads and plan on the July KW heading to $4.50 unless something changes with the weather.

Friday's soybean numbers were actually somewhat friendly. Production was lower than expected at 3.250 billion bushels and ending stocks were lower than expected at 230 million. 230 million isn't a bullish number, but it is better than feared. The export estimate was increased to a new record high level of 1.305 billion. At the moment there is no reason to doubt that number because sales are outstanding and it is still a long time until the S. American harvest. On the charts the beans look a lot better than they did a week ago. The November soybeans gained about 80 cents this week, moved through trend line support and closed back above the 50-day moving average. Strong demand and potential freeze damage were supportive this week and will make traders pay attention to the technical indicators that are giving buy signals when trade starts next week.

There isn't much positive news to report in the cattle market. Cash cattle trade was lower again at the $81 - $81.50 level. Boxed beef was lower again. Not much, but still lower. On the bright side, December LC were up 85 cents this week and technical indicators are starting to give buy signals in the deferred months. The biggest problem I see right now is that the December LC will run into trend line resistance at about $85.40 next week and probably fail. We shall see, but right now I am not very optimistic. If you want to be a buyer, buy August LC.

Universities to share in $20 million NSF grant

A $20 million National Science Foundation grant will further establish Kansas as an internationally recognized leader in global climate change and renewable energy research — and will let a Nobel Prize-winning K-State scientist continue his work on the effects of climate change.

“More than being pleased for researchers across the state, I also am excited what this investment by the National Science Foundation will mean for scientists at K-State,” said Kirk Schulz, K-State president. “This grant allows Charles Rice, a university distinguished professor of agronomy, and his fellow researchers to continue their important work on climate change. As K-State continues to make sustainability a campus priority, we are more proud than ever to be involved in a project on global climate change and renewable energy.”

Rice was a member of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change that was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 2007.

The five-year award to Kansas NSF EPSCoR (Experimental Program to Stimulate Competitive Research), a statewide program that includes major Kansas research universities, will provide a fresh integrative approach to address climate change and renewable energy challenges.

The grant is a multi-institutional, multi-sector effort that will link four universities: Kansas State University (K-State), the University of Kansas (KU), Wichita State University (WSU) and Haskell Indian Nations University; three Kansas-based companies: Abengoa Bioenergy, MGP Ingredients, and Nanoscale, and two companies outside of the state: ADM (Illinois) and Netcrystals (California) in a massive research effort. The initiative also will be supported by $4 million in matching funds from K-State, KU and Kansas Technology Enterprise Corporation (KTEC).

The Climate Change and Renewable Energy initiative spans a variety of disciplines, with five team leaders.

Rice, a University Distinguished Professor of Agronomy at K-State, leads the group that will use climate modeling tactics to predict the effects of climate change and develop strategies for adaptation and mitigation. Dietrich Earnhart, Associate Professor of Economics at KU and colleagues will assess how farmers make decisions about which crops to grow.

The part of the project that K-State's Rice leads — the climate change portion — makes up about $5 million of the $20 million funding.

About 40 scientists are currently involved in the collaborative consortium, representing a vast array of disciplines, including agronomy, anthropology, computer science, economics, geography, mathematics, sociology, engineering, biology, chemistry and physics.

EPSCoR is a federal program that targets states that have traditionally been underfunded in the sciences and engineering. In part, funding comes to EPSCoR jurisdictions through the Research Infrastructure Improvement (RII) program, which makes awards on a competitive basis for proposals that are aligned with the State's science and technology needs. For more information on NSF EPSCoR see: www.nsfepscor.ku.edu/.
