

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crofts

The USDA made some very important changes in the August supply and demand report. The most noticeable changes were the cuts in the corn and soybean yields. The national average corn yield was cut from 158.7 to 153.0, which was lower than the average trade guess, and in conjunction with the 500,000 cut in harvested acres, brought the production estimate below 13 billion to 12.914 billion bushels. The soybean yield estimate was cut by 2 bu/ac to 41.4, which was a much bigger cut than anyone was looking for and with the 500,000 cut to harvested acres that the soybeans also had, brought production down to 3.056 billion bushels. The production cuts were obviously bullish to the market and helped the corn reach limit higher on Thursday. The old saying is that small crops get smaller, so it is likely that the yield estimate falls further, and for that matter harvested acreage could fall further as well. The corn yield estimates for Iowa and Illinois are still well above last year even though crop condition ratings are below last year. There is definitely potential for yield cuts in those states. USDA obviously recognized some of the flooding and drought issues farmers are having across the country by cutting the harvested acreage estimates, but I still question whether they are looking at the huge abandonment in places like Kansas and Texas.

In order to temper the enthusiasm caused by the production cuts, USDA also made some severe cuts in demand. Both old crop and new crop ethanol usage was cut, old and new crop corn and soybean exports were cut, new crop corn feed usage was cut, old crop and new crop soybean crush was cut, and wheat exports were cut. One can give all those cuts a bullish tilt by saying that the market must now do its job and make sure that the demand slows down enough to meet those USDA projections, but the problem is, especially when one looks at exports, maybe the market is already doing its job. The bulls really need to see some better demand numbers, especially the corn and wheat, in order for the markets to make another significant move higher. I also have to point out that the corn ending stocks numbers are less bullish than they were in June when the ending stocks guess for the old crop was 730 million and new crop was at 695 million compared with the current numbers of 940 million and 714 million. The corn market was making new all time highs just ahead of the June supply and demand report and I think it will be difficult to return to those levels when we have so much more corn on hand. Soybean ending stocks aren't as tight as 2009, yet the price of new crop soybeans is above the price at any point during 2009. That takes me back to my point that for significant gains from this level, we have to have better demand, or have traders in general begin to assume that corn and soybean production will be cut further as we move into the fall.

On the charts, the December corn failed to move through the contract high on a couple of attempts Friday, which is certainly discouraging. Failure to move through that high on Monday will result in more sideways trade as traders wait for more information. The wheat broke out of the sideways pattern it had been in, but fell back into the range on Friday. The wheat has little reason to move independently of the corn, so if the corn isn't making higher highs, the wheat has little hope. The soybeans probably have the best chance at short term gains since the beans have been testing the bottom end of their trading range, have held at the support, and have enough bullish information to drift back to the top of the range. Long term I am bullish grains because I think production will be cut further and Asian demand will prevent too much additional demand destruction. I also think that southwest Kansas feed grain basis will continue to improve due to lack of production and high livestock prices. However, in the short run, we need the news to get a little more bullish in order to see further strength.

Speaking of livestock prices, the cattle posted solid gains last week. Beef was up, October live cattle picked up a couple of dollars and October feeders gained almost $2.50. It looks to me like the October live cattle will test the July high at the very least and probably make a run at the contract highs. New contract highs in the deferred live cattle futures are very, very likely in the next week or so. The October hogs probably scored a long term bottom on Thursday, so look for gains in that market as well.

K-State to host field day Aug. 25 in Garden City

The K-State Southwest Research and Extension Center will host its Field Day 2011 on Thursday, Aug. 25. The Center is located at 4500 E. Mary St. in Garden City.

The event begins at 8 a.m. with registration, coffee and doughnuts, as well as agricultural product displays. The program starts at 9 a.m. and includes morning field tours and afternoon seminars. A complimentary lunch, sponsored by exhibitors, will be provided. Field tour and seminar topics with K-State speakers include:

- Estimating Corn Yield Reduction from Hail — John Holman, cropping systems agronomist

- Emerging Herbicide for Broadleaf Weed Control in Sorghum — Randall Currie, weed specialist

- Current Herbicide Alternatives for Weed Control in Corn — Randall Currie, weed specialist

- Planting Time Prevention of Common Bunt in Wheat Production — Kent Martin, crops and soils specialist

- Wheat Response to Nitrogen in Kansas — Kent Martin, crops and soils specialist

- Alfalfa Weevil Control — Kent Martin, crops and soils specialist

2011 Sunflower Showcase to be held in Delphos

The Central Kansas Extension District is teaming up with the National Sunflower Association High Plains Committee and the Delphos Cooperative Association to host the 2011 Sunflower Showcase on Tuesday, August 30, 2011 at the Meadowlark Academy in Delphos. Formerly known as the Sunflower Celebration, this newly revamped event will feature presenters and information on the forefront of sunflower production in Kansas. Thanks to the support of Mycogen Seeds, Croplan Genetics, and Syngenta, this will be a free program to all producers.

The day will begin at 8:00 a.m. with breakfast in town followed by tours of local sunflower fields. The focus of the day will be on the economics of double-crop sunflowers versus double-crop soybeans. However, participants will also have the opportunity to view full-season flowers as well. During the tours, experts from K-State Research & Extension and Delphos Co-op will be offering production strategies for both scenarios in the areas of fertility, pest control, weed management, and general agronomics.

After the field tours, attendees will travel back for lunch and a discussion on hybrid selection with participating seed companies. An afternoon speaker panel will follow with presentations on farm policy, marketing, and updates from the National Sunflower Association and Kansas Sunflower Commission. In addition, John Jenkinson with AM 1030 KBUF Radio will be broadcasting live from the event throughout the day.

Pre-registration is required to get an accurate count for the meals. For more information or to RSVP by Wednesday, August 24, please contact Joni Wilson with Northern Sun/ADM in Goodland at (785) 899-6500 or the CKD Extension office in Minneapolis at (785) 392-2147.

High temperatures may reduce irrigated corn yields

Irrigated corn yields are not immune to the deleterious effects of the extended heat wave Kansas is experiencing this year, said Kraig Roozeboom, K-State Research and Extension crop production specialist.

There are several reasons for potential yield reductions in irrigated corn due to extreme heat, and all of them are somewhat related.

• High evapotranspiration (ET) rates during the vegetative stage. When temperatures are unusually high and the relative humidity is low, evapotranspiration rates may be so high that most irrigation systems can't keep up, Roozeboom said. Stress from high ET can reduce yields in the vegetative stage, even before the crop has silked.

• Potential ear size is being determined before tassel. Stress during the V8 to V11 growth stages can reduce row numbers on the ear. Stress during V12 to V17 stages, just prior to tasseling, can reduce the number of kernels per row," he said.

• Extreme heat during early grain fill. Research at Iowa State University has shown that extreme heat during grain fill reduces the rate and duration of grain fill, even if moisture is not a limiting factor, Roozeboom said. The ideal temperature for grain fill in corn is about 72 degrees. Field studies and observations indicate a yield loss can occur at higher temperatures. At temperatures from about 80 to 95 degrees, the rate of grain fill starts to slow down, even if roots are kept at normal soil temperatures from the shading of the canopy. At temperatures of about 105 to 110 degrees, the rate of grain fill and duration of grain fill are both reduced, resulting in yield losses.

• Stalk rot. Fusarium is the primary type of stalk rot on irrigated corn in Kansas, said Doug Jardine, K-State Research and Extension plant pathologist. Fusarium stalk rot incidence increases when corn is subjected to stresses such as drought and poor fertility. Fusarium stalk rot interferes with water and nutrient movement within the plant, and causes smaller ear size and stalk lodging.

• Stalk lodging. Although stalk rot is often present in corn that has lodged, the disease may or may not be the main reason for the lodging, Jardine said.

"Any factor that causes carbohydrate depletion in the stalk can predispose the plants to stalk weakening and potential lodging. Heat stress during grain fill, nutrient imbalances, hybrid characteristics, reduced photosynthetic capacity due to loss of leaf area from foliar diseases and spider mite infestations are other factors that may be involved. With improved breeding for standability, plants infected with stalk rot may not lodge at all," Jardine said.

Jenna Weeks earned grand champion bucket calf honors at the Geary County Free Fair.

Pannbacker Farm site of KLA/K-State Ranch Management Field Day

Improving cow-calf production efficiencies will highlight the topics to be addressed August 23 during a field day at Pannbacker Farm, Inc., near Washington. The family operation, consisting of a diversified beef cattle and farming business, involves Helen Pannbacker, her son and daughter-in-law, Bill and Chris, and her grandchildren, Jake and Molly. This will be the second of three ranch management field days presented this year by the Kansas Livestock Association (KLA) and Kansas State University.

As production costs continue to increase, producers need strategies to cut costs and become more efficient. K-State Cow-Calf Specialist Robert Weaber will share information on the implications of cow size, lactation and how to analyze other production features for gaining efficiencies. Kansas Department of Wildlife, Parks and Tourism Secretary Robin Jennison will highlight programs that offer public access for fishing on ponds and streams on private property, as well as recent changes to the state's walk-in hunting area program. Pannbacker Farm is a participant in this program, and Bill Pannbacker will share his experiences with attendees.

K-State beef cattle specialist Dale Blasi will give a presentation on alternatives for reducing winter feed costs for beef cows. Controlling these costs often is the most significant factor in the profitability of a cow-calf operation. Kansas producers have several options for meeting a cow's nutritional needs during the winter and early spring. Blasi will discuss the potential for crop residues and grain by-products as a cost-effective way to winter a cow herd.

Another educational session will focus on determining the stocking rate of a native grass pasture, which can be one of the most important management decisions facing cattle producers. Natural Resources Conservation Service range management specialist John Henry will provide an overview of factors to consider when determining a pasture's stocking rate and highlight practices a landowner should consider for improving grazing resources.

In addition, Kansas Animal Health Commissioner

Bill Brown will update attendees on the prevalence of trichomoniasis in Kansas. Trichomoniasis is an infection that causes reproductive and fertility problems in cow herds. The state recently adopted import regulations for the disease. Brown will discuss the state's role in reducing the incidence of trichomoniasis in Kansas and options for additional regulations if they become necessary.

The Washington field day will begin with registration at 3:30 p.m. and conclude with a free beef dinner at 7:00 p.m. All livestock producers and others involved in the business are invited to attend.

The field day site is located southwest of Washington. From Washington, go west about two miles on Highway 36 to Osage Road. Go south about one mile to 16th Road. Then, go one-quarter mile east to the field day site. From Highway 15 south of Washington, go to the 16th Road intersection and travel west about one and one-half miles to the field day site. Directional signs will be posted.

KLA and K-State also will host a ranch management field day August 29 at Erbes Farms near La Crosse. Unique aspects of the operation will be incorporated into the educational sessions.

Bayer Animal Health and the Farm Credit Associations of Kansas are sponsoring the events. For more information, go to www.kla.org or call the KLA office at (785) 273-5115. KLA is a trade organization representing the business interests of independent beef producers at the state and national levels. Members of the association are involved in all segments of the livestock industry, including cow-calf production, backgrounding, cattle feeding, swine, dairy and sheep.

You Didn't Get To Where You Are Today By Being Traditional.

Neither Did Drago.

There is nothing traditional about a Drago Corn Head. Automatic Self-Adjusting Deck Plates, quality component engineering and the 'No Back-Order Guarantee' are just a few things that set Drago apart.

It's a head of its time.

All Kansas producers encouraged to contact local FSA office

While some areas of Kansas have received much needed moisture recently, many areas of Kansas are still experiencing extreme drought conditions that are causing crop failure and the dispersal of livestock herds - herds that have taken generations to build. Kansas Secretary of Agriculture Dale Rodman has been working with local, state and federal officials to identify ways the public sector can assist Kansas farmers, ranchers and agribusinesses that are being adversely impacted by this drought. Last week Rodman worked with the Kansas FSA office to further clarify what options Kansas farmers and ranchers have regarding haying and grazing of Conservation Reserve Program (CRP) acres in all Kansas counties. There have been a number of policy changes in recent days. Therefore, it is recommended that farmers and ranchers continue to talk to their local FSA office regarding their options. This recommendation is true for all types of CRP acres - even if you have been in contact with your local office within the past week, policy changes have occurred to help producers. Even if your county is not recognized as a D3 or D4 drought county, you may still qualify for the revised Managed Haying and Grazing program due to recent policy changes. Kansas have long been known for helping their neighbors. These changes allow those outside of drought-stricken areas to help Kansans who are impacted by the drought.

Judge Ryan Breiner chose this Hereford junior yearling of Kati Fehlman's as reserve champion breeding beef at the Geary County Free Fair.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Hay trade moderate. Demand very strong for dairy and grinding alfalfa, moderate to strong for stock cow hay, alfalfa pellets and grass hay. Scattered rains across the Southern three-fourths of the State and a cool front have brought some welcome relief. More rain is needed to break the drought and prepare fields for Fall wheat planting. Corn silage chopping is in full swing, yields are down for both the grain and overall tonnage, however acres are going to be up due to poor pollination. Light weight calves in grower yards are requiring more roughage to take them to feeder weights. The overall supply of hay remains tight to very tight. If you have hay for sale or pasture to rent or need hay or grazing, use the services of the Hay and Pasture Exchange: www.kfb.org/hayandpasture/default.htm
