

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crofts

The Pro Farmer Crop Tour consistently found less corn yield potential than a year ago and in five of the seven states toured they found less yield potential than the 3-year average. There final guess for the national average yield is 146.45 - 149.4. If the Pro Farmer estimates are even remotely accurate, it doesn't look good for the national average corn yield and most likely we will see a final yield somewhere below 150 bu/ac. As for the soybeans, the outlook isn't quite so negative. The Pro Farmer Tour found mixed yield potential relative to last year and their final estimate was a national average yield of 40.96 to 42.64, which means they think there is potential for USDA to increase the yield estimate in a future report. The crop condition ratings over the next couple of weeks will be key since that will tell us whether yield potential is growing or shrinking from the present level.

The gold market made massive price swings last week. The October contract reached $1915/oz. on Tuesday, only to fall as low as $1701.70/oz. on Thursday. The market then bounced and climbed back to about $1829/oz. on Friday. Extreme volatility is often a sign of a top, and that may be the case with the gold. Since there wasn't any further quantitative easing announced by Ben Bernanke in Jackson Hole last week, we may not see money printing continue at such a rapid rate. Stay tuned though, it will take a close below $1700 to confirm a top.

The December corn gained 41 3/4 cents for the week, due mostly to Friday's surge higher. The December contract did make new contract highs 4 of the 5 trading days, so obviously not all of the strength came on Friday. Concerns about the corn crops yield potential have been growing for quite a while, which keeps good support under the market, and once the speech was done in Jackson hold Friday, traders felt free to buy everything except the U.S. dollar.

The corn market is certainly overbought at this point, but it can stay that way for a long time. A correction can occur at any time, but we won't see a change in trend until the size of the corn crop is confirmed. As long as there is any fear that the crop size will continue to shrink, there will be little reason to break the market. Right now, that means the market will maintain an upward bias at least until the September Crop Production report. After that it will depend upon the size of the cut made in September and the likelihood of another cut in October.

The December KW worked its way higher last week gaining nearly 50 cents. On the charts the December KW reached the 62% retracement of the move down from the May high, which will likely provide resistance next week, since the market is overbought. A correction is likely, but as long as the corn is firm, the wheat will be as well.

There is little fresh fundamental news. There are production problems in the spring wheat area and the HRW Belt is still dry. Exports are still too slow to inspire speculative buying and the market is basically relying on strength in the corn to create feed wheat demand. For independent strength the wheat has to have some fresh demand news.

Finally, after about eight months of trying, the November soybeans closed decisively above $14.00. The November beans spent about three days consolidating below the resistance then surged higher on Friday making the highest close in the November 2011 contract in three years. On the weekly chart we are at the highest level since early June and closed above trend line resistance that began back in February.

Daily chart indicators are overbought, but weekly chart indicators are nowhere near overbought. The action early next week will be critical, but it looks to me like the $14.00 level should now act as support and breaks should be bought.

The Pro Farmer Tour wasn't particularly supportive to the soybeans like it was to the corn, but I think it did put emphasis on the fact that we will need to see a good finish to the growing season in order for the soybean crop to maintain the production potential that it has. Heat and dry weather the next few weeks won't help the crop.

The cattle started the week under pressure, but found support and then strength to close out the week. The October LC only lost 30 cents for the week, which really wasn't that bad. The market is oversold and due for a bounce and I think we will get it next week. The beef market continues to move higher, which is certainly supportive and I think cash cattle trade will be higher next week. Look for the October LC to climb back to the $119 area.

The feeder cattle should be able to muster a similar rally next week. I look to sell the October feeder cattle on a move above $136.

Narrowbanding deadline nears for mobile radio operators

Farmers, fleet operators, schools and government agencies operating business band or Private Land Mobile Radio (PLMR) systems are facing a critical January 1, 2013, deadline. By that date, the FCC has mandated that all private PLMR licensees operating below 512 MHz move to 12.5 kHz narrowband voice channels.

Nex-Tech Mobile Radio Supervisor Ryan McClung urges PLMR operators to act soon, as the narrowbanding licensing process can be time-consuming. "The required FCC paperwork can take anywhere from six to nine months to process. Since everyone is required to make this change, the FCC's approval process continues to lengthen," he said.

While the narrowbanding mandate may have caught some licensees off-guard, McClung said many operators are taking action now.

"Many of our law enforcement customers are aware of the changes and are well on their way to being narrowband compliant," said McClung. "They have either purchased the equipment to become narrowband compliant or we have already transferred them over. Several schools are in the process now as well," he added.

McClung said operators most significantly impacted by the narrowbanding mandate will be those who are using older radio equipment. "Most radios purchased within the last five years will be narrowband compliant," stated McClung. "The manufacturers have known since 1997 that this date was coming and that these mandates were going into effect in 2013. Nex-Tech Mobile Radio will provide free narrowband walkthroughs for all customers, law enforcement agencies and schools, and will provide them with a current list of radios they have, indicate which radios are compliant or non-compliant, and provide them a solution to become narrowband compliant by the 2013 deadline."

With the narrowbanding deadline less than 17 months away, McClung encourages all PLMR operators to visit www.nex-tech.com/narrowbanding or to call Nex-Tech Mobile Radio toll free at (800) 542-1315 for more information.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Hay trade moderate. Demand very strong for dairy and grinding alfalfa, moderate to strong for stock cow hay, alfalfa pellets and grass hay. Fall crops and pastures over the southern three-fourths of Kansas continue to deteriorate, north of I-70 crops are much better. Hay continues to pour into the state from the north as buyers try to build inventories for winter use. Some loads of hay pass through the state to the drought areas of Oklahoma and Texas. Hot and dry is forecast for the next week with no relief in sight. If you have hay for sale or pasture to rent or need hay or grazing, use the services of the Hay and Pasture Exchange: www.kfb.org/hayandpasture/default.htm

More than 11,000 4-H exhibits expected at 2011 Kansas State Fair

The 2011 Kansas State Fair will open Sept. 9 and continue through Sept. 18. While attending the annual event is a tradition for many, seasoned as well as first-time fairgoers are encouraged to visit 4-H Centennial Hall to view 4-H projects that have earned the top awards at local fairs, a special Kansas Sesquicentennial award celebrating Kansas' 150th birthday - or both.

4-H Centennial Hall is located at the north end of the fairgrounds, and will house the majority of the more than 11,000 4-H project exhibits during the fair, said Beth Hinshaw, one of the K-State Research and Extension specialists coordinating 4-H events at the fair.

The building is open from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., from Sept. 9-Sept. 17, and, on Sept. 18 (closing day) from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m.

Viewing the exhibits is an excellent way for children and families to see the wide variety of 4-H projects and to see how youth use them to build on their interests and skills, Hinshaw said.

"Doing so is recommended for families considering youth development opportunities, but age need not be a factor in enjoying the exhibits," she said.

"Qualifying 4-H exhibits typically showcase the state," said Hinshaw, who noted that adults who have no connection with 4-H enjoy looking at the projects, as well. The entomology and geology collections are popular with visitors, she said, adding that it's not unusual for fairgoers to express interest in buying a woodworking project or tracking down a quilt or other craft pattern for their use.

While traditional projects are plentiful, visitors can also find the unusual.

Elizabeth Banks, a Crawford County 4-H member, has earned high marks this year for creating a dress, with accessories, from recycled materials. The dress, made for 75 cents, will be on display in the clothing construction area.

Joshua Fowler, from Anderson County, is combining the 4-H Self Determined and Visual Arts projects in a historical study of blacksmithing. His top 2011 project - a copy of a medieval dagger - was fashioned from a rod by heating and beating the metal to shape it. His project will be displayed in the visual arts area.

Environmental concerns, science and technology are integral to 4-H programs, and visitors to 4-H Centennial Hall also are encouraged to look for a "Foreign Animal Disease Security Map," crafted by Leavenworth County 4-H technology project participants. In building their project, the 4-H members used GPS-GIS (global positioning and geographic information systems) technologies to aid emergency management and homeland security.

The teens earned praise from local and state officials and captured second place in the K-12 division of an international map-making contest that drew more than 1,000 entries from 100 countries, said Beth Hecht, K-State Research and Extension associate specialist for geospatial literacy and advisor to the group. The map, as well as opportunities to try out geospatial technologies, will be on display in 4-H Centennial Hall during the state fair.

4-H programs are readily associated with foods, nutrition and health project, yet only a small sample of the more than 1,700 fresh food entries can be displayed at the fair, said Diane Mack, 4-H area specialist, who is coordinating the foods, nutrition and health entries at the fair this year. Representative samples are selected for display, said Mack, who noted that, once judged, remaining entries will become part of a giant bake sale beginning at 5 p.m. Sept. 9. The sale will continue until the building closes at 9 p.m., will resume Sept. 10 at 9 a.m. Sept. 10, and continue until all of the food is sold.

Proceeds from the sale will be used for travel and educational scholarships for the International 4-H Youth Exchange (IFYE) Program, she said. More information about educational 4-H opportunities for youth in urban, suburban and rural areas is available at the Information Booth in 4-H Centennial Hall, at K-State Research and Extension offices throughout the state, and online: www.Kansas4H.org.

Rossville Rustlers 4-H Club named to Kansas Best 150 list

By Jessica Aubert

For this group of 4-H'ers it was anything but the night-before-the-fair jitters. It was a year-long adventure of accomplishments just getting started at the Shawnee County 4-H Fair held July 22-24 at the Kansas Expo Center in Topeka.

The week before the fair Rossville Rustlers 4-H Club was voted to be the best 4-H club in Kansas by the Topeka Capital-Journal's Kansas Best 150. When asked what separates their 4-H group from any others, leaders Dan & Laurie Glotzbach replied, "We have a diversified group of kids in our club; we are just not involved in livestock projects but other great projects like woodworking, welding, clothing construction, table setting, foods and much more." Dan & Laurie have two girls, Danielle & Katie, who have been in 4-H since the age of seven. Though neither Dan nor Laurie were in 4-H as a child, they have spent the last six years as leaders and strongly believe in the 4-H program.

"It teaches your child responsibility; our group of 4-H'ers are not only involved with their own projects, but help the other members out as well," says Laurie. The families in the Rossville Rustlers 4-H Club could be seen on the other side of the fence cheering on each other's kids. This 42-member group of kids has a lot to be proud of this year, but this may be the best accomplishment as a group. Each individual this year excelled in different projects. Taegan Miller, a second year member, received grand champion overall market hog, grand champion bucket calf overall and grand champion first year showmanship in the bucket calf division. His parents Kelly and Alyssa Miller both replied "I never had that opportunity as a 4-H'er to win that many trophies!" They were both very excited for their son. Jason Logan received grand champion market lamb and reserve overall woodworking project, Trace Davis received reserve overall market hog, and Halley Kelley received grand champion woodworking overall and reserve champion recycling construction & reserve champion clothing construction senior. That is just a short list of winners at this year's county fair.

It's just not the county fair this 4-H club is involved with. "We have two fundraisers a year, one at the Shawnee County Spring Livestock Show doing a concession stand and the other selling flowers in the spring," says Laurie. This year's fundraisers allowed the group to send 18 members to 4-H Camp, Discovery Days, and Livestock Judging Camp. "Our kids are very involved," says Cindy Kelley, who has two children in the Rossville Rustlers 4-H Club. "We have ambassadors in our group of kids, parent and junior superintendents in several different areas of the fair, older 4-H members coming back to help out the younger ones."

The group has monthly meetings held at the Rossville Community Center, every third Wednesday of the month. During the year the club has different-themes for their meetings, such as going to the pool, Halloween Party or Officer Meetings, and at Christmas time they adopt a family and plant flowers on Main Street of Rossville in the spring. Every member of the Rossville Rusters is expected to give a 4-H project talk once a year. It could be anything from baking cookies in front of the other 4-H members to doing a talk over how to raise your pig. Shari Gentry, a mother of three 4-H members notes, "4-H project talks teach the kids to talk to the judges about their project, in 4-H they learn how to journal and keep track of expenses in their 4-H record books." Nothing teaches a child better than setting the values of life learning lessons at such a young age. As this group of Rossville Rustlers ends the year with the great accomplishment of being number one in the Kansas Best 150, leaders Dan & Laurie Glotzbach "Hopes that each of the Rossville Rustler 4-H members will take something they learned in 4-H as a youth to carry with them for the rest of their lives."

The real thing that sets this 4-H club apart from the others is that all the families work together "To make the best better."

Introducing the new Rawhide Processor by John McDonald

Rawhide Portable Corral, Inc., Abilene now offers the Rawhide Processor designed and built only by John McDonald. This innovative portable corral system has hydraulic transport wheels which are raised and lowered with the flip of a switch, no need to remove them. This model is a gooseneck with a sheeted alley and features the options of:

- 1) A manual or hydraulic adjustable alley which allows you to narrow the alley for calves as well as squeeze cattle in the alley.
- 2) A Head Gate may be attached to the end of the alley.
- 3) A loading chute may be built in.

A 15 amp solar panel is standard equipment on all models, no need to recharge your battery. This Rawhide Processor comes in the same three sizes our Original Rawhide Portable Corral has, the Standard, Large and Super Large. For more information, contact John or Mary McDonald at Rawhide Portable Corral, Inc. 785-263-3436. www.rawhideportablecorral.com

You can't manage what you can't measure

Tru-Test is proud to introduce the newest range of livestock weigh scales - the new EziWeigh™ series. This cutting edge development includes two rugged and powerful weigh scale indicators - the EziWeigh5 and EziWeigh6. Its innovative design, large LCD backlight screen, internal battery with run time up to 20 hours, and ease of use are just a few of the many key elements behind this revolutionary development. Because weight management and data collection needs vary, they developed two entry level weigh scales to give you more flexibility and control when working and weighing livestock. Below are some of the key features in the new EziWeigh weigh scales.

EziWeigh5 - basic weight readout with 1.4" LCD screen, backlight, and industry leading battery technology that offers up to 20 hours run time. EziWeigh6 - same features as EziWeigh5 PLUS - store and collect Visual ID and Electronic ID (EID), internal memory up to 10,000 animal weights, herd statistics, 3-way weight sorting, PC interface for easy download of animal data, and much more.

Tru-Test has been designing and manufacturing the world's leading electronic livestock weigh scales for nearly 30 years. Tru-Test scales are built specifically for livestock and designed to withstand the tough working elements when working cattle. Call

Zeitlow Distributing Co. today to see how Tru-Test weigh scales can help improve efficiencies and increase profitability in your cow herd. For more information, please contact Zeitlow Distributing Co. at 800-364-1605 or on the web at www.zeitlow.com.

Future food producers test crops, award winners to be announced September 10

The 4-H-FFA Wheat Plot Variety Contest is challenging, yet appealing, in that it offers future food producers the opportunity and the structure to literally plant seeds for their career, said Deryl Waldren, K-State Research and Extension area 4-H specialist.

The project provides samples of five different varieties of wheat seed, and requires young producers to track the crops from planting to harvest, and to prepare a report for each of the crop varieties, said Waldren, who is the advisor for the year-long project.

Thirty-seven youth producers participated in the project this year, and 18 will present their wheat variety displays in the 4-H Showcase Building during the 2011 Kansas State Fair, Sept. 9-18 in Hutchinson. The building is located at the north end of the fairgrounds, across from the Bison Arena.

The young growers will be on hand Saturday, Sept. 10 at 11:30 a.m. for the awards ceremony. Throughout the fair, the public is encouraged to view the wheat displays and information. Successful producers will be rewarded for their efforts, said Waldren, who acknowledged several donors. The 4-H-FFA Wheat Plot Variety Champion will be given $250, provided by the Kansas Wheat Commission; Reserve Champion will win $150, donated by the Kansas Crop Improvement Association, and third through fifth place cash awards will be given, courtesy of the Kansas Grain and Feed Association. KGFA also provides an award plaque for each of the top five award recipients.

"Living on a farm is not a prerequisite for choosing the project," said Waldren, who noted that several 4-H members "adopted a producer" by working with a neighbor or relative who collaborated with the 4-H member to provide the equipment and land. This is an excellent way to help youth appreciate the value of the project experience, and to encourage future food producers.

More information about educational 4-H programs is available at K-State Research and Extension offices throughout the state and online: www.Kansas4H.org.

Marion County Fair's champion breeding beef entry was shown by SaRae Roberts, with her Angus entry. She is a member of the South Cottonwood 4-H club.

Fire causes hay loss at Parsons Livestock Market

The Parsons Fire Department was dispatched to the Parsons Livestock Market on north U.S. 59 Highway early the morning of August 24th in response to a hay barn on fire.

Parsons Fire Chief, Larry Steeby said that upon their arrival the responders found the hay barn north of the sale facility fully engulfed in flames. Parsons Fire Department got the fire under control but left it still smoldering, according to the employees of the facility. The next morning, a local contractor was onsite moving hay around with a track hoe and skid steers. It is expected to continue to smolder and burn for several days.

The hay fire is currently under investigation. No one was injured, but the early morning fire caused an estimated loss of more than 3,000 square bales of prairie hay.

Interactive Farm Fiction

By Steve Suther

The only difference between fiction and nonfiction is whether it really happened.

Take projected profit, for example. A happy ending this year may seem likely or all but impossible, depending on how the year has unfolded and what is yet to come.

A sub-genre in fiction is called "fan fiction." Look it up online and you'll see how the interactivity keeps story engines humming as mostly school-age writers explore plot twists, hinges and consequences. Facebook has an interactive fiction game called "Farmville."

Truth may or may not be stranger than those fanciful exercises, but you do get to write most of your own chapters in life. Let's look at the plot elements.

Whether your fortune is looking up, down or in the middle, it is the result of two main factors: things you could not control and those you could. Notice the word is could, rather than did.

Looking back, few will argue with the big things placed on the "could not control" pile. Drought. Flood. Lightning.

But what about markets? Mechanical breakdowns? Politics? There are some gray areas subject to your influence through risk management, proactive maintenance and even voting.

Then there's all the stuff that just happens, but with a do-over you could bend to better support a happy ending. Most of those are decisions. Things you shoulda-coulda-woulda done, or not. Timing of words and deeds.

We often look at life one year at a time, especially in agriculture. There is an obvious annual cycle of planting and harvesting crops, and cattlemen try to manage cows to produce a calf each year.

Many things take more than a year to play out, or even move on to the next logical chapter. Some things are a life's work, like building a cow herd that produces the most profitable calves every year and builds demand for beef.

But still we look at the annual rhythms and break time down further into what needs to be done this week, today, before supper, so that our plans work out for the next week, month or year.

Every day holds some possible hinges of history for our year, our profit projections, even our lives. Unfortunately, we can't always know the significance or perhaps irreversible nature of a decision when it's made. And this isn't a drill.

Those with spring-born calves are planning to wean now, if drought or discipline has not already set an early-weaning program into play.

We don't have to wait till the end of the year to judge whether weaning is successful, but the hinges are probably there several weeks prior to the big day and others will turn the pages toward or away from profit for six or seven weeks after.

The basics are nutrition, health, handling and communication. Therein lie a bunch of potential plot twists.

Maintain those mineral feeders, introduce calves to a hay and grain ration and water from a tank or waterer. You can run through alternative story lines that skip some of those steps.

If the calves had no shots in the spring, it will pay to vaccinate a few weeks before weaning and then booster on the day. A lot of nonfiction research can illustrate consequences.

Plan your facilities and flow to minimize stress and security. Discuss all plans with your crew, veterinarian, marketer and cattle feeder. This is a rich area for plot and character development, but if communication breaks down, keep it clean.

If you have not taken an active enough role in writing your story, now's the time to jump in and save the day, or at least set up a cliffhanger with potential for a happy ending in the next episode.

Farris receives national award for incorporating ag in the classroom

Theresa Farris, a Service Valley kindergarten teacher, was recently honored along with four other teachers from across the nation, receiving the "Excellence in Teaching About Agriculture" award at the Agriculture in the Classroom National Conference in Ft. Lauderdale, Fla. June 22-25. Farris is the Kansas Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom's (KFAC) 2011 Janet Simms Memorial Teacher of the Year.

The award program honors teachers who are innovative in bringing agriculture into the classroom. It is co-sponsored by the Agriculture in the Classroom (AITC) of the USDA National Institute of Food and Agriculture and the National Agriculture in the Classroom Consortium.

"We are so pleased that this national honor was presented to Theresa," said Cathy Musick, KFAC executive director. "She is the first Kansas teacher to receive this well-deserved award."

Farris credits her success to her integration of agriculture into her classroom throughout the entire school year. Her student's enthusiasm for agriculture allowed for her incorporation of agriculture into reading, math, science and other subjects.

"Receiving the award was humbling," said Farris. "The other candidates were awesome teachers and what they did in their classrooms showed that I was in very good company."

Many people and organizations made it possible for Farris to receive this award and travel to Ft. Lauderdale.

"I would like to thank Janet Simms family and Cathy Musick and Ashley Mueller for helping me through the process," said Farris.

For more information on the awards program or AITC visit www.agclassroom.org.

Harnessing the power of plants: Kansas State University team studies sorghum genetics to fuel green energy research

Those choices at the pump may look a little greener in the future as a Kansas State University research team is conducting a study that could eventually add "plant" to the list of fuel options.

In early August, four faculty members from K-State's College of Agriculture and College of Engineering received an $800,000 grant from the U.S. departments of Agriculture and Energy under the Plant Feedstocks Genomics for Bioenergy research program. The grant funds a three-year study that will provide the genetic groundwork necessary for potentially turning sorghum into biofuel by increasing the plant's biomass yield.

"Bioenergy is a very hot topic and there's a lot of talk about its possibilities," said Jianming Yu, associate professor of agronomy and leader of the study. "But a lot of work still needs to be done since it's still a new field. And unless genetics is improved, industries probably won't want to get involved because there are still too many unknowns."

Yu is conducting the sorghum bioenergy study with K-State's Tesfaye Tesso, assistant professor of agronomy; Scott Staggenborg, professor of agronomy; and Donghai Wang, professor of biological and agricultural engineering, along with researchers from the University of Minnesota and the USDA's Agricultural Research Service plant genetic resources conservation unit. K-State is one of nine universities chosen nationally to participate in genomics studies related to bioenergy. Potential benefits from these university studies range from decreasing oil imports to optimizing crops that can tolerate drought, poor soil and other unfavorable conditions.

Over the next three years the K-State team will build a genetic database on biomass sorghum, a type of sorghum that contains little grain and is mostly leaves and stalk. Biomass sorghum provides a large amount of high-quality feedstock, which can produce eco-friendly fuels. Kansas is the top producer of sorghum in the U.S., accounting for nearly half of the country's annual yield. Similarly, the U.S. is the world's largest grain sorghum exporter and ranks second in production, according to Staggenborg.

But despite the country's large production of sorghum, little data about biomass sorghum's genetics and how to improve the crop exists, outside of some USDA studies on the sorghum collection conducted many years ago. While many grain crops have had their genetics and production refined and documented for decades, the K-State sorghum team essentially has to start from scratch.

"Our study will sort of be a prototype with new lessons and insights into how we combine this proven method of plant breeding — changing a plant's genetics to make more starch, more yield, or in this case, more biomass — with this new genomic technology to optimize the improvement process," Tesso said. "In the bigger picture, this study addresses some of those emerging issues with energy and climate change."

To build the database, the team is looking at genetic diversity in sorghum's germplasm — essentially the plant's gene bank. Members will start with 1,000 sorghum lines selected from the center of the germplasm pool. A line is the unique genetic material in sorghum. Those samples will then be genotyped, a process where the team looks at each sample's unique molecular diversity and compares it to the molecular diversity found in the sampled collection as a whole.

From those 1,000 samples, a subset of 300 samples will be chosen to represent the maximum amount of diversity, and will be studied more in depth for biomass yield and biomass composition. Once the biomass yield is found for those 300 samples, Yu and the others can then predict the biomass yield of the remaining 700 untested samples from that original 1,000 sample set.

Additionally, some field samples will chemically analyzed. Data from this analysis will be used with near-infrared spectroscopy technology to build predictive models. The researchers can use these models to accurately predict the biomass composition in the other samples rather than using the costly chemical analysis process. Wang, whose expertise is in biological and agricultural engineering, will oversee this phase.

"This process is part of what we call 21st-century predictive biology," Yu said.

Charlie Peters, a member of the South Cottonwood 4-H club, showed the reserve grand champion market beef with his market heifer entry at the Marion County Fair.

"We'll have a total of 3,600 field samples collected for this two-year, dual replication study from three locations in Kansas. The third and final year will be dedicated to validation. Basically we'll have a ton of samples to work with, and this predictive process will help us manage the data and workload."

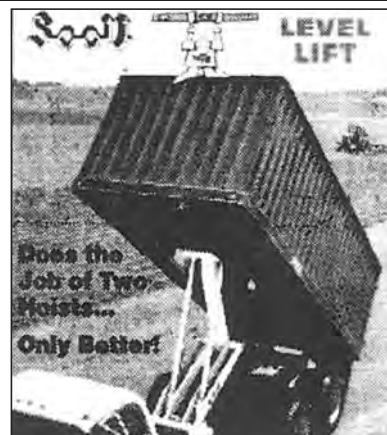

Yu said the group is prepped for this new genetic challenge through their previous research projects, which have been supported by K-State's Targeted Excellence Program, Kansas Grain Sorghum Commission, National Sorghum Checkoff Program and the Great Plains Sorghum Improvement and Utilization Center.

"There's that adage that says you can't just build a better car by making a bigger engine. You also need a solid frame to support it," Yu said. "For this biomass sorghum car, we don't have the upgrades yet that are necessary to really think about the engine, so we need to build and improve that framework. It's pretty exciting that a single project like this can bring together such an interdisciplinary team for a singular focus."

Extension agronomist offers wheat variety selection tips

The 2011 wheat harvest is but a distant memory for many farmers, who are well on their way to planning the 2012 wheat crop. It is variety selection time, and Jim Shroyer, Extension agronomist for Kansas State University, says choosing the best wheat varieties requires due diligence, but there are four traits to keep in mind: adaptability, genetic variability, pest resistance and yield.

Farmers who plant several different varieties would be wise to choose varieties with different genetic background, in order to increase resistance to pests, and spread out maturity levels. The prevalence of stripe rust two years ago is a grim reminder at how important genetic diversity can be.

"The 2010 crop really got hurt by stripe rust, especially if varieties had Jagger in the background, and most of our varieties then did have Jagger in the background," Shroyer says. "That really sifted the susceptibility out. From that point on, we're seeing varieties that don't have as much Jagger in the background, or have no Jagger in the background." Shroyer adds that studying the K-State Disease and Insect Resistance Ratings is critical, too. In 2011, barley yellow dwarf was the most prevalent wheat disease in Kansas, but each year is different. In 2010, it was stripe rust; in past years, speckled leaf blotch, leaf rust and wheat streak mosaic were challenges.

Finally, producers need to look at yield.

"You want something that yields well and consistently under diversity," Shroyer says. "Also, keep in mind that what's good for wheat, is also good for diseases. Be prepared to use a fungicide if necessary."

The agronomist says wheat farmers may want to use blends of multiple varieties of wheat in order to add disease resistance and complementation diversity. For example, a farmer may want to plant a variety with high yield potential, but is susceptible to stripe rust. To protect against stripe rust, blend that variety with another variety that contains stripe rust resistance. That way, if an outbreak of stripe rust were to occur, some of the yield potential of that field is protected.

"You try and mix and match because we don't have a perfect variety," he explains. "You try and match what the other one doesn't have."

Farmers can look at the 2011 Winter Wheat Performance Tests to learn which wheat varieties yielded the best in several K-State-sanctioned test plots throughout the state. The complete results are online at www.agronomy.ksu.edu/ksept, or farmers may pick up a free copy of the 2011 Kansas Wheat Book from a local certified seed dealer or Extension office.

Another source of variety information is the "Know Your Wheat" book, published by the Kansas Wheat Commission and available at grain elevators or certified seed dealers throughout the state. The pocket-sized guide is free of charge.

Reserve champion dairy goat at the Marion County Fair was shown by Keenan Stultz. He was also the champion dairy showman.

Maintaining farms' grass waterways essential for best results

Grass waterways are an important part of a farm's overall soil conservation plan, but producers and landowners have to work at maintaining them or they cannot fulfill their function, said DeAnn Presley, K-State Research and Extension soil management specialist.

Grass waterways are permanent strips of grass seeded in areas of cropland where water either concentrates or flows off a field from terraces or diversions. They have several functions, each of which adds value to a farm, Presley said. "The overall purpose of the waterway is to carry runoff water from a field. The grass prevents the water from forming a gully and traps some sediment," she said. "In addition, the vegetation absorbs some of the chemicals and nutrients in the runoff water, and provides habitat for small animals and birds." For maintenance of grass waterways, Presley recommends:

- * Lift equipment out of the ground and shut off spray equipment when crossing the waterway. Encourage commercial applicators to do the same.

- * If bare spots appear, reseed with sod-forming grasses.

- * Do not use the waterway as a roadway. Tracks can turn into gullies in single, intense rain events.

- * Do not overgraze or allow livestock trails to form. These can quickly turn into gullies.

- * If gullies form, fill, reshape, and reseed. Contact your local USDA Natural Resources Conservation Service field office for recommendations on grass species to plant.

- * Fertilize cool-season grasses regularly at a rate of 30 to 40 pounds of nitrogen per acre between November and mid-March. Many producers fertilize grass waterways when they topdress wheat.

- * Mow periodically, but don't mow between April 20 and July 15 when birds are nesting. It's important that it encourages the formation of a dense sod. Also, shorter, thick grass is more effective at trapping sediment than tall grass, which will lay over in an intense rain event.

- * Be careful not to till into the edges of the waterway.

- * Avoid end rows planted parallel along the waterway. They may allow gullies to form on the waterway edge.

For more information, see K-State publication MF-1064, "Maintaining Grass Waterways," available at your local county Research and Extension office or at: <http://www.ksre.ksu.edu/library/crpsl2/mf1064.pdf>.

Controlling sericea lespedeza

By David Hallauer
Meadowlark
Extension District

If it hasn't already, sericea lespedeza will soon begin the bloom stage. This flowering period will continue through much of September. And even though it's fast heading towards maturity, this can be a very good time for sericea control with herbicides.

At the bud and early flowering stage, sericea lespedeza can be controlled with Remedy Ultra (triclopyr) at 1.5 pints/acre. Watch plants closely, however. After sericea has reached the full-bloom stage until the first freeze, products containing metsulfuron are the herbicides of choice. Use rate is one-half ounce of metsulfuron per acre.

Metsulfuron can control sericea lespedeza even through seed fill, unless the plants are under drought stress (no problem this year!).

Control the plants before mid-seed fill, however. If the sericea has already formed viable seeds when it is treated with metsulfuron, the seeds can germinate the following year and spread the problem.

Avoid haying or grazing of grass with sericea lespedeza infestations after the plants have gone to seed or spreading to other areas will occur.

Next spring, areas with a sericea lespedeza infestation should be burned to encourage germination of sericea seed, remove new sericea growth, and remove all dead plant material. After the burn, these areas should be intensively grazed until no later than mid-July. Four to six weeks after grazing ceases, any remaining sericea can be treated with an appropriate product. An alternative to the burn + graze + herbicide approach is to spray sericea lespedeza in June when plants are in a vegetative growth stage with Remedy (1-1.5pts/a) or PastureGard (2 pts/a).

BAXTER BLACK

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

I Know That Hat

I don't know you but I know that hat. I wore a hat just like it.

Back in the days when men were men. You bet the pot and played to win

And if you lost you tried again. You bet your life I know that hat.

A cowboy gave that hat to me. Back then it was nearly new.

"Wear it well," he said to me, "You're startin' out, the world to see.

I hope you find your destiny," And so I took that cowboy's hat

I put that good ol' hat to work... when work was all I knew

Wrench in hand and on my back, fencing pliers, the ol' line shack,

Horseshoes, ropes and cattle tracks, That hat could hold its own

But then I put my tools away and hung up that ol' hat

I climbed aboard the 'business' train, faced each mountain as it came

Made my mark and only wore the hat to cool ambition

Cause I was on the inside rail building cornerstones.

I learned to find my way around, to keep my feet on solid ground,

Not judge a man when he was down. The hat just took it all in stride... and waited

It watched to see how I would play the cards that I'd been dealt

Would I stay strong through boom or bust? Would my soul grow or gather dust?

Was I a man someone could trust? And could I face the man in the mirror.

Nowdays I live my life content, but always thinkin'. I'm keepin' busy just the same, Trusting others with the reins, share the praise and take the blame.

It's just the way that life goes when your hand's on the wheel

Yup, I don't know you but I know that hat. Mine's hanging' on the wall

It just reminds me what it takes to make life good. Ya get some breaks

Then give some back for ol' mistakes. And if you learned life's lessons well,

They all can tell. 'Cause if you did, that hat, that good ol' hat...

Still fits your big ol' head.

Tell them you saw it in Grass & Grain!
