

Kansas State University agronomist offers wheat planting tips

With extremely dry conditions covering most of Kansas during wheat planting season, there are a few important steps farmers can take to improve the chances of getting a good stand of wheat, according to Jim Shroyer, Extension agronomist at Kansas State University.

• Proper tractor speed. It is best to use a tractor speed of between 5 and 6 miles per hour in most cases when drilling wheat, depending on the amount of down pressure on the openers. If higher speeds are used, the openers can tend to "ride up" in the soil every now and then; at slow speeds, openers can sink a bit.

• Proper, uniform seeding depth. The ideal planting depth for wheat in most cases is about 1.5 inches. When planting early into very warm soils, it is especially important not to plant too deeply since coleoptile lengths are shorter than normal under warm conditions. On the other extreme, producers should also be especially careful not to plant too deeply when planting later than the recommended time into very cool soils. Getting a uniform seeding depth is also important.

• Firm seedbed. One of the most common problems in wheat stand establishment is planting into loose, fluffy soils. This problem tends to occur most often where soils have been tilled repeatedly during the summer. When seeds are planted into loose soils, rains in the fall will settle the soil and leave the crowns of the seedlings too close to the soil surface.

• Plant during the optimum time. In general, wheat should be planted somewhere around the Hessian fly-free date. There may be good reasons to plant some wheat before the fly-free date, such as planting for pasture or time pressures from having considerable acreage to plant. But stand establishment and ultimate grain yields are usually best when wheat is planted after the fly-free date and before deadlines set by crop insurance.

• Adequate soil fertility. In general, producers should apply at least part of their nitrogen before or at planting time to get the plants off to a strong start. Nitrogen rates of 20-30 lbs can help with fall establishment and tillering. If the soil is low or very low in phosphorus or potassium, these nutrients should be applied at planting time as well so that the plants benefit early in their development.

• Using a seed treatment. Fungicide seed treatments may help with stand establishment in certain situations. For seed production fields, a systemic seed treatment is highly recommended to help keep seedborne pathogens such as bunt and loose smut out of seed stocks. In addition, seed treatments sometimes improve stands.

• Make adjustments for planting into row crop stubble. When planting wheat into grain sorghum stubble, producers will need an extra 30 lbs N per acre over their normal N rate. Also, it is important to make sure the sorghum is dead before planting wheat.

When planting wheat into soybean stubble, producers should not reduce their N rates since the N credit from soybeans doesn't take effect until the following spring. If the wheat is being planted no-till after row crop harvest, N rates should be increased by 20 lbs N per acre over the normal N rate. Seeding rates should be increased when planting wheat late after row crop harvest. It's best to use a seeding rate of 90 to 120 lbs per acre in central and eastern Kansas, and 75 to 100 lbs per acre in western Kansas.

K-State professors receive national crops teaching, research awards

Two Kansas State University faculty members have received national honors from the Crop Science Society of America and American Society of Agronomy.

Kevin Donnelly, professor of agronomy, received the 2011 Crop Science Teaching Award from the Crop Science Society of America. Donnelly's primary focus is crop science teaching and student service. He has served as American Society of Agronomy Resident Education Division chair and national adviser for Students of Agronomy, Soils and Environmental Sciences; and on the Collegiate Crops Contest committee. He has been the crops team coach and agronomy club adviser at both K-State and Oklahoma State University, and served as assistant dean in the College of Agriculture at K-State for 10 years.

Daniel Sweeney, professor, soil and water management, K-State Southeast Agricultural Research Center, received the 2011 Werner L. Nelson Award for Diagnosis of Yield-Limiting Factors from the American Society of Agronomy (ASA). Sweeney's research addresses soil fertility and management for row crops and forages grown on claypan soils. He has served on the editorial boards of Journal of Production Agriculture and Agronomy

Journal. He is the current editor of Crop Management and serving a second term as the S-4 (soil fertility and plant nutrition) Soil Science Society of America board representative (SSSA). He is a Fellow of ASA and SSSA.

CSSA and ASA are educational organizations that help their members advance the disciplines and practices of agronomy, crop and soil sciences by supporting professional growth and science policy initiatives and by providing research-based publications and member services.

Riffel places first in WeedOlympics

A Kansas State University graduate student in agronomy won top regional honors at the first WeedOlympics, which attracted graduate and undergraduate students from across North America.

J. D. Riffel from Stockton, participating in the competition with the K-State weeds team, placed first in the individual graduate student category for the Western Weed Science Society. Riffel and approximately 150 other competitors participated in many events, including weed and herbicide identification, sprayer calibration and weed management problem solving.

The K-State weeds team took second overall in the team category of the Western Weed Science Society.

The WeedOlympics was held July 26 to 27 at the University of Tennessee and was sponsored by the Northeastern, North Central, Southern and Western Weed Science Societies.

U.S. Farmers & Ranchers Alliance to host The Food Dialogues Sept. 22

The U.S. Farmers & Ranchers Alliance (USFRA) announced recently that it will host The Food Dialogues, a town hall-style discussion to address Americans' questions about how their food is grown and raised and the long-term impact of the food they are eating - on their own health and the health of the planet. These topics, as well as findings from recent surveys of farmers, ranchers and consumers conducted by USFRA, will all be discussed during this interactive event taking place at four locations across the U.S. and online on September 22.

"Americans want to know where their food comes from, how it was raised and if it is good for their health long-term," said Bob Stallman, chairman of USFRA and president of the American Farm Bureau Federation. "We realize farmers and ranchers haven't always done the best job answering Americans' questions about how food is grown and raised, and hope The Food Dialogues event will be the start of an ongoing dialogue that addresses these questions and more. We hope everyone who cares about the future of food and how we provide healthy choices for people everywhere will join the discussion, including farmers of all sizes - small and large, conventional and organic, consumers and food decision-makers."

The Food Dialogues will include four panel discussions, featuring leaders in food, food service, media and policy, farmers of all types and business leaders, who will share different viewpoints about the current and future states of food, and how food is grown and raised. These discussions will take place at four U.S. locations including Washington, D.C., New York, the Midwest and California, as well as online via Facebook and USFRA's new website, www.fooodia.org.

To date, USFRA has secured several high-profile participants including Claire Shipman, television journalist and senior national correspondent at ABC's "Good Morning America," who will moderate the event from Washington, D.C. and chef John Besh, who will moderate from New York. Additional participants include Max Armstrong of Farm Progress Companies and Jane Wells of CNBC.

USFRA will announce the full list of panelists prior to The Food Dialogues event. The panel discussion will initiate in Washington, D.C. at 10:30 a.m. Central Time and will conclude with the final panel taking place in California. The entire event will stream live online from 10:30 a.m. through 4:00 p.m. Central Time, providing opportunities for farmers, ranchers and the general public to register to watch and participate in the discussion online.

"This event will allow anyone with an Internet connection the ability to join a conversation about food and where it comes from," said Stallman. "Consumers rightfully want to know that farmers and ranchers are treating animals well, maintaining food quality and safety and doing our jobs in ways that don't harm the environment. This is an opportunity to ask questions, challenge current thinking and truly engage in a real-time, two-way conversation taking place on www.fooodia.org and USFRA's Facebook page about food with farmers, ranchers and other major thought leaders in the food and agriculture industry."

New Survey Data to Drive Conversation

The town hall-style discussion will also feature findings from recent surveys of farmers, ranchers and consumers, conducted by USFRA in July and August 2011. USFRA will first announce findings of the farmer/rancher survey which aimed to identify topics the agricultural community wished Americans had more information about when it comes to how food is grown and raised. Top-line findings of the farmer/rancher survey conducted in July 2011 reveal that farmers and ranchers believe the average consumer has very little knowledge on several topics related to food production, including the effect of pesticides, fertilizers and antibiotics on food; where their food comes from in general; and proper care of livestock and poultry. These and other concerns highlighted in a new national consumer survey conducted in August 2011 will be at the forefront of discussion topics.

KSU Denim Runway 2011 design contest highlights cotton production

Kansas State University (KSU) is offering its fashion design students a chance to discover how a small cotton plant can make a huge fashion statement. Kansas Cotton Association (KCA) is partnering with Lubbock, Texas-based Plains Cotton Cooperative Association (PCCA) and KSU to bring cotton, denim and future fashion designers together in the Sunflower State via a design contest at the university.

KCA is a 100 percent producer-based organization whose primary purpose is the promotion of Kansas cotton production and use through education and research. The chance to educate future apparel designers about cotton and denim is the association's latest goal.

"The idea to expand PCCA's original denim design contest, entitled 'Denim Runway', will give us just this opportunity," said KCA president Bob Miller, a cotton farmer from Wellington. "KCA has provided a generous grant to aid in sponsorship of the contest for the KSU fashion design students," he added.

"Our success with the Denim Runway design contest at Texas Tech University for the past two years led to the expansion of the contest to KSU's Department of Apparel, Textiles, and Interior Design," said PCCA president and CEO Wally Darneille. "We believe PCCA's producer-members in Kansas will enjoy seeing their own version of the contest unfold in their state."

PCCA is a farmer-owned cotton marketing cooperative with the only fully vertically integrated supply chain for denim apparel in the Western Hemisphere. The supply chain includes the American Cotton Growers (ACG) denim mill at Littlefield, Texas, and the Denimatrix jeans facility in Guatemala City, Guatemala, both of which are renowned for innovative, high-fashion denim fabrics and jeans.

With its ties to the cotton and textile industry, PCCA created the Denim Runway design contest in 2010 in collaboration with Texas Tech University's Apparel Design and Manufacturing Department in the College of Human Sciences as a way to help fashion design students understand all of the links in the denim apparel supply chain.

Thus, KCA reached out to KSU Assistant Professor of Apparel Textiles and Interior Design Joycelyn Burdett, Ph.D., recognizing the potential joint-venture the association could have with the university. Miller says this contest will create a unique partnership and link between the university and the cotton industry in Kansas.

"Kansas farmers often do not get to see the crop they raise end up on a fashion runway," Miller said. "This is a very exciting opportunity to promote our product and benefit the university."

Burdett said this contest will be an excellent approach in engaging her fashion design students with a natural fiber such as cotton while promoting Kansas agriculture.

"We are absolutely thrilled to have the support of KCA for our design students," Burdett said. "It will give our students a definite advantage in the job market."

By participating in Denim Runway, contestants advance their design skills by creating denim garments using ACG denim and have the opportunity to strengthen their speaking skills by presenting their designs to a panel of judges. Interacting with judges provides a real-world experience as they discuss their design inspirations, marketing and pricing strategies, and construction.

Denim Runway at KSU is set to officially kick-off on September 13 with interactive tours and presentations for participating student/contestants. PCCA Director of Business Development for Kansas and Northern Oklahoma Dick Cooper, and Gary Feist, manager of the Southern Kansas Cotton Growers (SKCG) gin in Anthony, will present "A Farmer's Perspective" and "Grading Cotton" in a classroom lecture. Contestants also will travel to SKCG where they will be able to see first hand the cotton ginning process and, essentially, where jeans originate.

"This will be the start of the contestants' 'field to fashion' experience throughout the next few months," said PCCA communications specialist Emma Matkin.

The design contest will consist of three major categories. The Fashion Jeans competition will feature designs for men's and women's jeans and is limited to upperclassmen enrolled in special topics classes. In the Casual Category, contestants have the opportunity to design and create products out of denim fabric other than jeans. Items designed in this contest must be made of denim, and contestants are encouraged to express unlimited design ideas. The final category is a Cotton Trend Board competition where students will research trends for cotton fiber and apparel and demonstrate the results in the form of a presentation board. Both the Casual Category and Cotton Trend Board competition will be open to all students in the department who wish to participate. After visiting SKCG, contestants will be presented with a selection of high fashion ACG denim fabrics to choose from for their project entries.

Educated with a background of cotton and supplied with some of the finest denim in the United States, contestants will then spend the next two months designing and creating their desired garments. A $10,000 grant from KCA will enable those contestants eligible for the Fashion Jeans competition to travel to ACG's denim mill in Littlefield, Texas, to complete their designs. Denim mill personnel will assist contestants in proper sanding and washing techniques and applying buttons and rivets with industrial-grade machines.

"The opportunity to see the field-to-fabric cotton production and to work in the textile finishing labs at ACG is quite rare," Burdett said. "No amount of classroom lecture can be as meaningful as an actual experience such as this."

Contest judging will begin the last week of November, and results will be announced at the department's "Cotton, the Fabric of our Future; Today" fashion show on December 1, 2011, at KSU. Contest winners in each category will receive cash prizes and recognition plaques from PCCA.

Alli Terrapin of the Happy Valley 4-H Club drove the overall champion market hog at the Wabaunsee County Fair. Judge for the show was John Nagel.

Producers should check grain sorghum for stalk rot

A lot of attention has been given to stalk rot and other lodging problems in corn this year. But producers should keep in mind that stalk rot can be an even bigger problem in grain sorghum due to a generally thinner stalk, said Doug Jardine, K-State Research and Extension plant pathologist.

The best estimates are that at least 5 percent of the sorghum crop is lost each year to stalk rot, he said.

"The incidence of stalk rot in individual fields may reach 90 to 100 percent with yield losses of 50 percent. The most obvious losses occur when plants lodge. More important may be the yield losses that go unnoticed," Jardine said.

These losses are caused by reduced head size, poor filling of grain, and early head lodging as plants mature early, he explained.

In grain sorghum, the two most common types of stalk rot are charcoal rot and Fusarium stalk rot, he said. Although caused by many different organisms, the symptoms of the various stalk rots are somewhat similar, he said.

"Symptoms generally appear several weeks after pollination when the plant appears to prematurely ripen. The leaves become dry, taking on a grayish-green appearance similar to frost injury. The stalk usually dies a few weeks later," Jardine said.

Producers can check their sorghum for stalk rots by squeezing the lower stem with their thumb and fingers.

"If the stalks crush easily, they are probably infected with one of the stalk rot organisms and may lodge at any time. Check 100 plants across the field to determine the percentage of affected plants. If the percentage of stalk-rot-infected plants is high, sorghum should be harvested as soon as possible, even if it hasn't dried down adequately in the field," the K-State plant pathologist said.

"If the stalks are firm, the plants will probably be able to stand just fine in the field for several more weeks if necessary," he added.

Stalk rot is a stress-related disease, he said.

"When the carbohydrates used to fill grain become unavailable due to nutrient shortage, drought stress, leaf loss from insects, hail, disease or reduced sunlight, the plant is forced to use nitrogen and carbohydrate reserves stored in the stalk to complete grain fill. This loss of nitrogen and carbohydrate reserves weakens stalk tissues and results in increased stalk rot susceptibility," Jardine said.

For more information and management practices to reduce stalk rot, see "Stalk Rot of Corn and Sorghum," K-State publication L-741, at: www.ksre.ksu.edu/library/plant2/L741.pdf.

The overall market beef champion at the Wabaunsee County Fair was shown by Mandy Michaelis of the Newbury 4-H Club. Ron Hinrichsen judged the event.

Soybean farmers, K-State equally proud of new AstroTurf surface

Most people would not consider playing football on a soybean field. The Kansas State Wildcats will be doing just that, in a manner of speaking, when they take to Wagner Field in Bill Snyder Family Stadium this fall.

K-State recently installed AstroTurf® GameDay Grass™ 3D60H in its football stadium. The new synthetic surface includes a soy-based backing that was developed with funding from the national soybean checkoff. K-State is the first Football Bowl Subdivision school to use the new backing, which replaces traditional petroleum-based polymers with bio-based ones derived from soybean oil.

"Soybean farmers are proud of K-State's new surface with the soy-based backing," said Bob Haselwood, a soybean farmer from Berryton who chairs both the Kansas Soybean Commission (KSC) and the new-uses program for the United Soybean Board (USB). "It is a high-profile illustration of our commitment to help develop new uses and new demand for U.S. soy through the check-off, we pay each time we sell beans."

To celebrate the partnership among K-State, AstroTurf and the soybean check-off, KSC and USB are co-sponsoring the Wildcats' second home game of the season, when they will line up against Kent State. The Sept. 17 event will include a tailgate promotion and pregame ball presentation. The first 5,000 fans to visit the Kansas Soybean tent near the southwest corner of the stadium before or during the game can take home a sample of the innovative playing surface.

The new AstroTurf system provides several benefits for the Wildcat football program. Chief among them are player performance and safety. Durability is another important characteristic.

"We can't wait for the team to get to play on this new AstroTurf surface," said Bryan Peebles, president of AstroTurf. "This state-of-the-art field and the program at Kansas State are going to be a great combination."

Civil War story to come to life at Farm Heritage Celebration

Living historian Michelle Martin of Bartlesville, Okla., will bring the dramatic story of Emma Caroline Morely's survival during the Civil War at the fourth annual Farm Heritage Celebration on Friday, September 30. Throughout the day, Martin will present "She Slept on the Cold, Hard Ground."

Martin's historical program will combine life on the prairie with how women survived on the plains during the tumultuous time. The story line was created based on Morely's diary as she traveled to Kansas.

In October 1864, Emma Caroline Morely left the comfort of her home and family in Ohio to travel west to Kansas. From the moment she left St. Louis until her arrival in Fort Scott in October 1864, Emma's journey was filled with danger; little did she know that she would travel just a few days ahead of Confederate general Sterling Price's massive raid from Missouri into Kansas. After arriving in Fort Scott to spend time with her brother John, a successful mercantile owner, Emma would be forced to once again leave safety and comfort as Price's troops headed south from Kansas City towards Fort Scott intent on taking the city and military post for the Confederacy.

Emma and her family and friends would become refugees adrift in the Kansas prairie living in wagons, sleeping on the cold hard ground, searching for food and fighting to survive. After returning to Fort Scott, Emma would live out her life's dream and served as a nurse in the hospital ward at Fort Scott tending the sick and wounded after the Battle of Mine Creek.

This presentation is sponsored by the SEK Farm History Center and Discovering History, LLC. Martin is the founder/president of Discovering History, LLC and is a published author, photographer and historian who specializes in bringing women of the 19th century to life through her one woman historical programs. Martin has been a featured re-enactor at numerous historic sites in Kansas, Missouri, Arkansas and Oklahoma. She is a volunteer for the National Park Service Volunteer In Parks Program at Fort Scott National Historic Site, Fort Larned National Historic Site, Wilson's Creek National Battlefield and Pea Ridge National Military Park.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Hay trade moderate. Demand very strong for dairy and grinding alfalfa, moderate to strong for stock cow hay, alfalfa pellets and grass hay. The break in the heat is a welcome relief, but the dry weather continues with no rain in the forecast. Army worms are showing up in south central Kansas, producers need to keep an eye on new seedling alfalfa. More and more resistance to the high hay prices is being encountered as the milk and fat cattle prices have both softened a little. If you have hay for sale or pasture to rent or need hay or grazing, use the services of the Hay and Pasture Exchange: www.kfb.org/hayandpasture/default.htm

K-State plans Fall 2011 Beef Calf Conferences in three locations

Kansas State University will host the K-State Fall 2011 Beef Calf Conference in three locations - Atwood, Oakley, and Stockton, in late September.

Keynote presentations by K-State Research and Extension speakers at all three conferences are "Beef Cattle Market Outlook," by Glynn Tonsor, livestock marketing specialist, and "Calf and Stocker Research Highlights: Updates in Management, Nutrition and Health," by Dale Blasi, stocker and forage specialist.

Each conference will include a meal and location-specific speakers, as well. Dates, times and site-specific presentation topics include:

Sept. 27 - Atwood - 6:30 p.m. - 4-H Building - RSVP by Sept. 22 to 785-626-3192 or cdixon@ksu.edu

•Beef Quality Assurance;
Sept. 28 - Oakley - 10:00

a.m. - Northwest Kansas Educational Service Center - RSVP by Sept. 22 to 785-743-6361 or rsbarrow@ksu.edu

•Keeping Pastures Productive; and

Sept. 28 - Stockton - 5:00 p.m. - Rooks Co. Fairgrounds, Harding Hall 4-H Building - RSVP by Sept. 26 to 785-425-6851 or rboyle@ksu.edu

•Local Forage Analysis, Feed Costs and Ration Balancing

•Lowering Winter Feed Costs

Dinner in the Meadow: a benefit for Marysville Farmers' Market

Dinner in the Meadow, a meal of fresh local foods, will be served at 5 p.m. Sunday, Sept. 18, on Stella's Meadow at historic Alcove Spring south of Marysville. The event is a benefit for Marysville Farmers' Market.

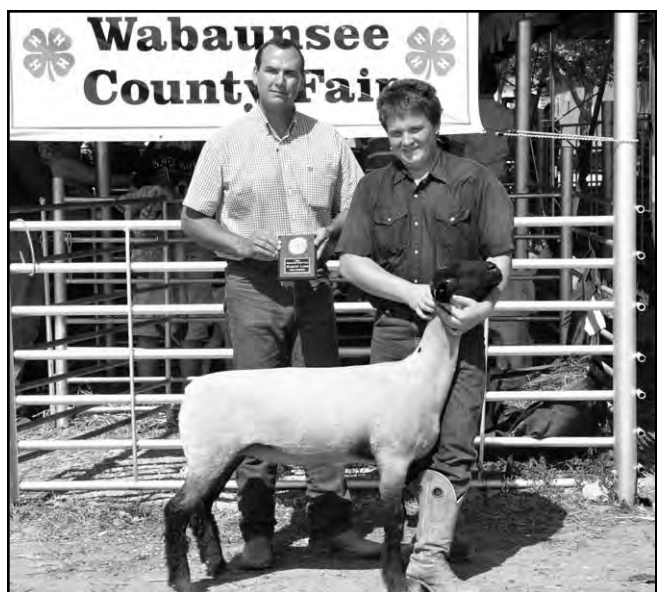

The menu features appetizers and a main course of farm-raised lamb and chicken shish kabobs, local potatoes, vegetables, homemade bread, Marshall County fruit pies and Kansas wine. Live entertainment is planned.

Tickets cost $25 and are available by calling Marysville Sport & Recreation at 785-562-6818 or by stopping by Marysville Health & Fitness, 816 Center St., or the Marysville Advocate, 107 S. 9th. Seating is limited to 50. Tickets will be on sale through Sept. 15.

All proceeds will help cover advertising costs for the market and education for vendors planning their gardens for next year's market. Marysville Farmers' Market runs from 8 to 11 a.m. each Saturday May through October on Seventh Street in downtown Marysville.

Zane Green of the Harveyville 4-H Club led the champion market lamb at the Wabaunsee County Fair. Ryan Higbie judged the show.

The supreme heifer at the Wabaunsee County Fair was shown by Taylor Nikkel, Maple Hill Hustlers 4-H Club. Judging the show was Ron Hinrichsen.

Suspect charged in Parsons Livestock Market hay fire

An 18-year-old Parsons teen has been arrested in connection with the hay fire at Parsons Livestock Market.

On August 30, Aaron M. Sauer of Parsons was charged in Labette County District Court with arson and non-residential burglary, which are both felonies, and two misdemeanor charges of criminal damage to property and theft.

The fire destroyed more than 3,000 small square bales of prairie hay and damaged the three-year-old barn.

Parsons Police Chief John Keele said that while the investigation is still ongoing, Sauer has also been charged with a burglary at the Masonic Lodge No. 117 in Parsons.

Labette County District Court has set a hearing for the case on September 19.

Nikole Cain of the Friendly Farmers 4-H Club led the overall champion dairy goat at the Wabaunsee County Fair. Judging the event was Ryan Higbie.
