Gourmet popcorn business flourishes after family relocates to rural town

By Tom Parker

In the perfect hindsight of five years, Lance Nobert will attest that things worked out pretty much as he expected them to when he, his wife, Megan, and their three young children ditched city life for Clyde, a small town of less than a thousand in north-central Kansas. After all, they weren't complete strangers to rural life, as he and his wife had both grown up in the area. He knew there would be big changes (there were), that the ideal of a slower pace of life was just that, an ideal (it was), that there would be cultural adaptations (no Lowe's hardware store on Saturday night), and that, once the dust settled and they were well into the new chapter of their lives, it would be as if they had never left in the first place. But he had to admit that the pumpkins and the popcorn were something of a surprise.

They didn't set out to be hobby farmers, or part-time farmers or whatever you call someone who dabbles in raising market crops while never fully realizing why they were doing it in the first place and completely uncomfortable with any designated term pitched at them. "I was raised in a farming family," Lance says while standing in a field of corn, the stalks yellowed and brittle and rattling in a soft breeze like so many castanets. "I know how much work goes into farming. I really don't do that. I'm not sure what to call myself."

He's a banker, first off, also something of a surprise as his background was in the USDA Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS), where he and a partner monitored exotic insects invading the United States in general and western Missouri in particular. He set up trapping programs and assisted businesses exporting ag-based products to foreign markets, building relationships between clients and government agencies. He had absolutely no qualifications to be a loan officer, and yet it was the job that had fallen into his lap when he began laying the groundwork for their relocation. Now he was in charge of agricultural and commercial loans, the former at least relative to his former career and an agronomy degree from Kansas State University.

Their relocation was about returning to their roots, of swapping six-lane highways for cobblestone streets and neighbors that know who you are. Their timing was perfect: school hadn't started yet for their children so the transition would be less complicated, and the housing market, always tight, had a few promising openings including a big two-story Victorian house on two lots. Megan remembered playing in that house as a child, so it was immediately familiar. It was the right price, too, so they made the purchase and made the move and then started looking at that extra lot.

They could, as their neighbors did, just keep it mowed down. But farming ran in his blood, and the family decided to plant pumpkins. Being the agronomy scientist that he is, he researched varieties of pumpkins, pumpkin diseases, planting dates and watering methods, and broke ground on a quarter-acre. That first fall they had more pumpkins than they knew what to do with.

"We had tremendous success," Lance says. "We had so many that people started dropping by asking to buy them. So we set up a display and started selling pumpkins."

They also planted eight rows of corn. It wasn't the yellow or sweet corn that everyone else around town grew but hull-less popcorn in varieties whose names resonated with the shifting colors and hues of the ears: Shaman's Blue, Ruby Red, White. Popcorn was big in the family, not just a snack but an essential element connecting them to Lance's upbringing. "I remember how dad would make popcorn on Friday nights and we'd sit around watching television," he says. "Our family loves popcorn. We eat it three times a week on average."

That first harvest was decent, enough for the family and a few friends. The second year was much better—he planted 30 100-foot rows, having moved the pumpkins to a neighbor's unused lot a few blocks away, and ended up with between 300 and 400 pounds of popcorn. "We had so much that it made it harder to give away," Lance says. Using a vintage John Deere corn sheller to strip the kernels from the husk was a time-consuming process but manageable, at least that second year. Neighbors and their friends began begging for the corn. They had plenty, but they also had ideas that seemed to spring from the fertile soil like so many corn stalks.

"At that time we started thinking about turning it into a side business," he says. They moved their popcorn ent than anything around, it was tasty.

"Our varieties are a lot better than ordinary popcorn," Lance says. "They're virtually hull-less, which means they don't get a lot of stuff stuck in your gums. The hull shatters when it pops. They pop up a little smaller than yellow popcorn but the flavors are much better. The Ruby Red has a slight nutty flavor that people really like."

Besides their unique flavor, the popcorn is also healthier than standard yellow popcorn. Kernels of Ruby Red and Shaman's Blue retain more anthocyanin and cyanidin, making them higher in antioxidants than other varieties. No special equipment is needed to pop the corn; a heavy pan with lid and a little oil, a microwave bowl or air poppers are equally effective.

The fourth year was their largest planting. What came next was a harvest of epic proportions. With 10,000 pounds of popcorn on their hands, the John Deere sheller and Lance's home-made kernel cleaner were no longer adequate. Fortunately, Ohlde Seed Company in nearby Palmer could handle the load. And so Loveland Acres Popcorn — named after their housing addition in Clyde — was in business.

In the past year, retailers such as HyVee, Eastside and Westside Market, People's

Weather talk

By John Schlageck
Kansas Farm Bureau

For the first time last week a touch of fall filled the early morning air. With the coming of fall and approach of winter, it's fun to recall some time-tested weather sayings.

Many of the following weather signs were collected from farmers and ranchers across the state. It seems there is very little people would rather talk about than the weather.

So let's talk weather.

During the winter season, strong northerly winds indicate snow and sometimes a blizzard within 24 hours.

Southerly winds are a sign of dry, warmer weather.

When cattle stand in a line with their backs toward the northwest, you can figure on a heavy, driving snow.

Dense fog at dawn is a sign of clearing skies by mid-morning.

The absence of birds around water denotes an approaching storm.

White, fluffy, small clouds are a sign of fair weather ahead.

Odors become easier to detect just before rain. High pressure usually traps odors like a lid due to air density, while lowering pressure releases odors.

When you see lightning in the north, rain is likely within 24 hours.

When distant sounds appear louder, rain is usually on the way.

Rising smoke is a fair-weather sign. When you see smoke going downward or showing very little rise, rain is likely.

Birds perch more before a storm because the low barometric pressure makes it more difficult for them to fly. When you see hawks circling high in the sky, this is a fair weather sign.

When frogs begin to croak, look out for rain.

Hens and other barnyard fowl pick at themselves – oiling their feathers – just before a rain.

Lots of dead skunks on the road mean plenty of moisture is on the way. Another good sign of approaching wet weather is the aggravation of corns, bunions or arthritis pains.

These signs are surprisingly accurate because they are based on generations of farmers, ranchers and other people who have observed cyclical changes in the weather.

There is plenty to be said for the folk wisdom of our ancestors. They watched and charted weather patterns for generations rather than just a few hours or days. It's fun to hear their conclusions handed down from one generation to the next, and anyway, what would we have to talk about if not for the weather?

ing commentator on agriculture and rural Kansas. Born and raised on a diversified farm in northwestern Kansas, his writing reflects a lifetime of experience, knowledge and passion.

Prairie Ponderings

By Donna Sullivan

After 32 years of marriage, four kids and four grand-kids, my husband uttered the four words I had been dreading for years. They came at the breakfast table, and I'll admit, I wasn't really all that surprised. In fact, I had sort of been expecting them.

"Stop writing about me," he said.

At first I thought he was kidding. I mean seriously, to pull the rug out from under me after all these years, it had to be a joke, right?

No, he was serious.

"You exaggerate and make me sound silly," he continued.

"I'm a writer," I said. "It's what we do!"

But for him, the case was closed. Now what was I going to do? Good material is hard to find, and with the kids all grown and gone, what do I have left?

So I decided, hey, two can play this game.

The next morning we sat down to breakfast and I played my ace in the hole.

"I want to have another baby," I said, just as he took a sip of coffee.

His chair is on the end of the table six feet away from our sliding glass door, but there was quickly coffee running down its panes in little brown rivulets.

"Are you crazy?" he sputtered, and I'm pretty sure the question was not rhetorical.

"Well," I said, "you said I can't write about you and I'm too young to retire, so what choice do I have? And really, one baby won't be enough, because we don't want it to grow up alone, so we really need two or three. Just think, it will be like starting over!"

It hasn't happened often in our marriage, but this time, he knew he'd been beat.

He stared down into his coffee cup for a few long seconds before looking up.

"Fine," he said. "You can keep writing about me."

I was trying to be a gracious winner, so I limited myself to two victory laps around the table. I kissed him on the cheek and went over to clean the coffee off the door. But as I looked at the streaks of coffee on the glass, they looked more like a trophy than a mess. So I left them for now. You know, just a subtle reminder that in the direst of circumstances, I truly can be a warrior. I can face insurmountable odds and delight in the sweet taste of a hard-won victory. Not that I have to do that often in my line of work, but when duty calls, this girl now knows she's got what it takes.

Harvest is going full bore at our farm. In fact, this column is coming to you straight from seat of the grain truck in between loads. This year I can only write a column in between loads and not a whole book like last year. It is funny just what a little rain will do; it sure makes harvest more fun.

Today was perfect, blue sky, temperatures in the 70s and a wind blowing the dust away from me. Harvest is one of the best times of the year – that is, when things are going right. In between rains and heavy dews each morning we are making slow and steady progress each day and hopefully we will be done in time to bring the cows home in November.

Even though things are going very well for us, I can't help but think of my fellow farmers and ranchers in South Dakota and Wyoming. A former pastor of my church lives in Sturgis and I followed the blizzard on his Facebook page. All the time I was thinking what a horrible mess it was making of their trees and how much of a hassle and a danger it would be to get around.

It wasn't until later in the week that I started to hear about the horrific death losses the ranchers had received because of the storm. Then I started to see the pictures and it made me sick to my stomach. I suspect most of the cattle were still on summer range far from shelter and feed. I saw pictures of animals piled up in ditches, dead along fences and heard about others wandering miles from home.

Instantly my heart went out to my fellow ranchers – I tried to put myself in their shoes and it was not a good feeling. I cannot imagine how helpless and sad they must have felt. There is nothing worse than knowing your animals are lost or suffering, and then to pile on the inability to do anything about it would be terrible.

I am also sure that just as soon as they could safely (and probably long before it was safe) travel they spent hours trying to account for, feed and save as many animals as they could. I am sure they did so without thought for their own health and safety. It must have been exhausting and awful. No one could have been prepared for such a disaster.

My thoughts then went to our detractors, groups like HSUS and PETA. These people claim to care for animals and spend a great amount of time and money advocating on behalf of animals. I wonder how many of them assisted in the searches or hauled feed through clogged roads and drifts. I am sure many sat in warm, comfortable climate controlled houses, offices and apartments and continued to pass judgment on those of us who care for animals each day.

The idea that ranchers care for their animals and feel a deep sense of loss and pain is something the "advocates" cannot fathom. They think we see our stock only as merchandise and not as living creatures under our care. I promise you this, each of those ranchers spent help-less hours and sleepless nights pacing and looking out the window at the storm.

Sure, some of the pain was financial. We depend on selling beef to care for our families; there is no way around it. The wholesale losses that were seen by many ranchers will take a terrible toll on their livelihoods. In addition, years spent refining genetics and building herds were wiped out in just a few hours. That is a financial loss that is tough to take.

However, the greatest pain will be the loss of those cattle, sheep and horses... the thought that the animals lost were in their care and they could do nothing. Yes, I am sure they prepared as well as they could and I am equally as sure that they made a heroic effort after the storm. That does not ease their pain and grief.

Each of us who spends a lifetime caring for livestock feels a great sense of responsibility for them, even when we know events out of our hands. While their end purpose may be food, we work hard to insure their comfort and safety while we have them. Please, join with me and keep the farmers and ranchers affected by this storm in your thoughts and prayers.

Grocery and others have picked up the product line. Online sales are available at the company's website. The Noberts also added a storage building with a commercial kitchen beside their house, and are now looking for ways to expand.

"It's still a very small business," Lance says. "It takes a lot of time and effort to broaden your exposure, but I think we've been successful at it."

Recently, seemingly out of the blue, the Noberts began getting inquiries and orders for their popcorn. Their business, they discovered, had been featured in a trade magazine for gift shops and specialty stores.

"It's little things that like that get you excited," he says.

Government unable to respond to distress in livestock industry

As the U.S. government remains in shut-down mode, National Farmers Union (NFU) is deeply concerned about the direct impact it is having on livestock producers, especially in severe-weather-stricken areas. NFU president Roger Johnson issued the following statement:

"Over the past few days, Colorado, South Dakota, Wyoming and other areas have seen record amounts of unseasonably early snowfall. With government agencies operating in limited capacity, the residents of these areas were lacking information and saw delays in reports and warnings in order to be prepared for the extreme conditions experienced.

"Early estimates just in the state of South Dakota are showing losses of 15% to 20% of entire herds. We are operating with limited information, as USDA offices are not collecting or receiving data; however, this is an extremely concerning situation. Ranchers do not have access to assistance with the USDA Farm Service Agency offices closed; Livestock Indemnity Program benefits are not available; and other sources of support and information are unavailable.

"We are only beginning to learn of the impact that these weather disasters have had on our family farmers and ranchers while the government is shut down. I am deeply concerned for the future of our industry if this situation continues.

"It is critical that Congress pass a clean Continuing Resolution, get the government working again, and also pass a five-year, comprehensive farm bill this year. We cannot afford this standstill any longer."

Tiny Victories In Healthful Eating Lead To A Satisfied Family

By Allison Enke, MA, RD (NAPSA) — Creating healthful meals that the whole family will enjoy doesn't have to be a daunting task.

Add nutrient-dense foods to your cooking routine to make little changes and embrace tiny victories for a happier, healthier family.

Tiny Victory #1: To satisfy after-school cravings and aid better dinnertime decisions, stock up on nutritious snacks so kids have healthy options at their fingertips. Hummus with veggies, string cheese with whole wheat crackers, and air-popped popcorn are likely hits.

Tiny Victory #2: Since some grains such as brown rice can take a while to cook, make a batch ahead on the weekend to have on hand. Freeze prepared whole grains (or get them already frozen) for another quick meal solution. Stocking quick-cooking grains such as quinoa helps add variety, as can having whole grain bread and tortillas on hand for simple meals.

Tiny Victory #3: Add vegetables to dishes that kids love, whether it's pureeing butternut squash to bulk up macaroni and cheese, adding shredded carrots to a sandwich, or broccoli "trees" to a child's favorite pasta dish.

Try out this recipe from the taste experts at Whole Foods Market, where simple substitutions of whole wheat flour and fat-free yogurt for regular flour, oil and butter can make a more filling, delicious and healthy start to your child's day.

Peanut Butter and Jelly Snack Muffins (makes 12 muffins)

- 1 3/4 cups whole wheat pastry flour
- 3 tablespoons ground flaxseed meal
- 1 teaspoon baking powder
- 1/2 teaspoon baking soda
- 1/2 teaspoon fine sea salt
- 3/4 cup low-fat milk
- 2/3 cup smooth peanut butter
- 1/2 cup 365 Everyday Value Organic Vanilla Nonfat Yogurt

2 large eggs
1/4 cup fruit-sweetened fruit jelly or jam

Preheat oven to 400 degrees. Line 12 muffin cups with paper liners. In a large bowl, whisk together flour, flaxseed meal, baking powder, baking soda and salt. In a separate bowl, whisk together milk, peanut butter, yogurt and eggs. Gradually stir peanut butter mixture into flour mixture until just combined. Fill muffin cups half full. Add 1 teaspoon jam into the center of each muffin. Top with remaining batter. Bake 15 minutes or until lightly golden. Let cool in pan 5 minutes, then remove and cool completely on a wire rack.

REMINDER: Dos & Don'ts for Home Canning Safety

Dos:

- Start with good quality fresh fruits and vegetables that have been thoroughly rinsed and scrubbed with a vegetable brush to remove debris.
- Only use glass home canning jars (mason/kerr jars) with 2 part sealing lids and bands.
- Prepare the lids and jars according to manufacturers suggestions.
- Choose the appropriate canning method for the foods being preserved.
- Have all your canning utensils on hand and ready to use before you start preserving food.
- Make sure to inspect the canning jars for chips or cracks as this can effect whether the jars seal properly as well as add a risk of breakage during the canning process.
- Wash and sterilize the canning jars.
- Allow for proper head space when filling the jars.
- Follow the canning recipes exactly.
- Stick to recommended processing times for each canning project.

• Store canned food in a cool, dry and dark place.

Don'ts:

- Don't forget to wash your hands before you start your canning project. Wash up again during the canning event if you sneeze or have to use the bathroom.
- Do not use "commercial" jars such as spaghetti or mayo jars. They are not meant for canning and carry a high risk of breakage during the canning process.
- Only use a 2 piece band and lid set for sealing jars. Bands may be used again and again as long as they are not rusted or bent. Never reuse a canning lid; once it has been used it will not be able to re-seal during processing.
- Don't use the open kettle or any type of oven method for preserving and canning. The USDA and other authority sites have stated that this is no longer a safe way to can food.

- Do not over tighten bands.
- Don't deviate from canning recipes; they are measured out to make sure that the food will stay safe and process correctly.
- Hot liquids in cold jars don't mix; make sure your jars are heated before filling them to avoid breakage.
- Don't forget to label the canned foods with their content and date of processing.
- Do not store jars upside down once processed.
- Don't under process the foods being canned.
- Do not remove the lid to the canning pot while the processing is going on.
- Don't attempt to eat any canned food that appears to have not sealed properly and has mold or discoloration.

The Real West

Western movies are great entertainment. There's always the hero. You used to be able to tell him by his white hat. He was always good with a six-gun and usually had two of them with pearl handles strapped to his waist. He always rode a fine horse with fancy gear. You could tell the hero a mile away by the horse that he rode.

The bad guy was just as obvious. He wore black. The scowl on his face gave him away. He was usually a banker or a big rancher aiming to take everything away from the little guy, but he always failed because the fellow in the white hat always got in the way.

The modern Westerns aren't always quite as obvious; they are usually more realistic in looks, but one thing hasn't changed much. Western "reels" don't have a lot to do with honest history. In "real" west the good guys weren't always good and the bad guys could sometimes save the day.

When an outlaw gang rode into Ellsworth the citizens didn't wait for the good guy in the white hat to save them. They just grabbed the leaders in their sleep, took them out to a tree, and hung them. When Wild Bill Hickok tried to keep the army boys in line, while serving as the Ellis County Sheriff at Hays City, the army ran him out of town. And when cowboys celebrated in an end-of-trail town the lawmen often helped gamblers fleece them of their hard-earned cash. Horse thieves transformed into fine upstanding citizens and good men turned outlaw. It sounds a lot like the movies because they use a lot of the same themes in their fictional accounts but the real stories are often better than the reel stories.

David Butterfield started Butterfield's Overland Despatch (B.O.D.) in 1866 to transport supplies from Atchison to Denver, Colorado. A stagecoach service was added when Butterfield won a federal contract to carry the mail. To the north, Ben Holladay ran a similar line along the Platte River. From the beginning the B.O.D. was plagued with Indian raids on their stations. No one could ever prove it, but many suspected the raiders to be white men dressed as Indians. Butterfield went broke and Holladay bought him out.

In reality, the good guys didn't always win. In Abilene, Joseph McCoy created the Great Western Stock Yards that handled untold numbers of Texas longhorns. He made a deal with the railroad to receive a commission for every carload of cattle shipped from his yards. From the beginning, opponents conspired against him. The railroads reneged on the payment and developed competing stockyards to go around him. Businessmen undermined his influence in Abilene and within a few short years the founder of the great cattle boom of the Wild West era was broke.

In the movies cattlemen might be on the trail for weeks, sometimes months, and when the cowtown is finally reached the herd is wildly driven through the streets, pushed into the corals, and loaded on waiting railcars. The owner joins his cowboys at the local saloon and a great celebration is commenced. There are many versions, but the reality was clearly a more drawn-out affair.

The herd could actually be months on the trail. San Antonio, Texas, to Abilene, Kansas, is over seven hundred miles. Trail herds moved slowly, at an average of ten miles per day. At that rate the cowboys would be on the trail at least ten weeks, with the addition of a couple of weeks allowed for setbacks from swollen streams, stampedes, and just plain exhaustion.

The cattle were not driven directly to the stockyards at trail's end. A grazing area was found within a day's drive of the yards and the cattle allowed to spread out and get fat on Kansas grass. The chuck wagon was set by a water supply, preferably a free-flowing stream of sweet spring water. For the next several weeks the site was their home base, known as the cow camp. Cowboys trailed into town a few at a time. Rarely did the whole outfit come to town all at once.

That's not to say there wasn't plenty of excitement.

The cow camps were scattered over the prairie, and guests were always welcome. Plenty of cowboys went to town, but a lot of them visited back and forth between camps. Cow camp gossip was a popular activity. Music, gambling, and drinking around the wagon combined to give rise to a way of life never seen in the movies but easily found on The Way West.

It's back; Venison 101: From Field to Table

Fall is officially here which means the wait is almost over for avid hunters to enjoy this year's hunting season. The delight of the hunt doesn't have to end in the field. The enjoyment of hard work can continue to the dinner table if the game is handled properly along the way. Game meats are an excellent source of protein and are naturally lean. With some simple tips and instructions, hunters of all experience levels should be able to enjoy their product long after the hunt has ended.

If you are interested in learning more about processing venison, Central Kansas Extension District and Kansas Department of Wildlife, Parks and Tourism will again be hosting "Venison 101: From Field to Table" this fall. This workshop is designed for both seasoned and novice hunters who have an interest in expanding their knowledge of processing venison and preparing delicious venison for family and friends. Speakers from K-State Research and Extension and KDWP will provide an in-depth cutting demonstration, various home processing methods and formulations and food safety practices. Changes and updates to hunting laws and deer diseases will also be discussed. There will be a chili supper served and drawings for door prizes.

Venison 101 will be held Thursday, October 24th,

5:30-9:00 p.m. at Scout Hall in Minneapolis. Doors will open at 5:00 p.m. Cost of the program is $10.00 per person. Pre-registration by October 17th is required. For more information, contact Leah Robinson in the Minneapolis Extension office, 785-392-2147.

The grand champion market goat at the Rush County Fair was exhibited by Demi Bartonek, pictured with Frank Riedl, general manager of Great Bend Coop, who was the premium buyer.

Symphony in the Flint Hills restores historic prairie

Although this year's Symphony in the Flint Hills at Fort Riley is now a memory for those who attended, one impact of the event lives on through a restored section of tallgrass prairie that sits atop Fort Riley's historic Grant Ridge just south of Marshall Field and I-70.

Named in honor of General Ulysses S. Grant, Grant Ridge formed the southern boundary of the original 1853 Fort Riley Military Reservation. At that time, the ridge offered a quintessential view of the Flint Hills—one unobstructed by a single tree.

Unfortunately, over the years the ridge was invaded by Eastern red cedar and locust trees, which threatened both native vegetation and wildlife. The US Fish and Wildlife Service's program, Partners for Fish and Wildlife, warns that prairie tree invasion harms grassland-nesting birds and robs the native grasses of water and sunlight. "One acre of cedar trees consumes up to 55,000 gallons of water a year," said Greg Kramos, Private Lands Biologist with the program.

In "Tree Invasion" (Kansas Wildlife and Parks magazine, Volume 60: Sept-Oct 2003), wildlife biologist Randy Rogers challenged Kansans to guard their prairie:

"Those of us living on the Great Plains must come to realize that it is as much an act of redemption for us to kill trees that invade our prairies as it is for others to plant trees in a forest clear cut... Our responsibility is to guard our precious remaining prairies for ourselves and our children, for spectacular prairie chickens and tiny grasshopper sparrows and for the other people and creatures of Earth."

In preparation for the

2013 event, Symphony in Flint Hills advisory board member and former education chair, Michael Stubbs, saw this as "a unique opportunity to return Grant Ridge to its former glory and provide the public with a very visible example of prairie restoration."

"A trademark of Symphony in the Flint Hills has always been its expansive view of the tallgrass prairie," said Marty White, Symphony in the Flint

A section of tallgrass prairie on Fort Riley's Grant Ridge had become invaded by Eastern red cedar and locust trees.

Hills board chair. "When we first toured this year's Artillery Parade Field concert site, the only Flint Hills view was one of a prairie in decline. Since our mission is focused around heightening the appreciation and knowledge of the tallgrass prairie, we felt compelled to do our part."

Following that initial visit to the site, Stubbs helped coordinate a partnership between the Geary County Commission, rancher Richard Roeser, the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service, the Kansas Grazing Land Coalition, the Westar Green Team, the U.S. Army-Fort Riley DES-Fire & Emergency Service and Symphony in the Flint Hills, Inc. to remove invasive trees from 170 acres, which included Grant Ridge. The Special Provisions section of the partnership agreement noted that the project would "... offer an excellent opportunity to educate the public on the threats to the Flint Hills of Kansas and will allow us to demonstrate practices that can benefit our native prairie ecosystems."

Brad Loveless, Director of biology and conservation Programs at Westar Energy, and a member of the restoration crew, commented, "With the encroachment of trees, it was a great surprise to see what high quality prairie grasses and forbs still exist on Grant Ridge. The grass has not been overgrazed and it is spectacular in terms of diversity and quantity of plants. It's a remarkable prairie you don't often get to see."

Work on the project was completed prior to this year's June 15 event thanks in large part to the unique collaboration of public and private organizations—a partnership that Symphony in the Flint Hills hopes will serve as the foundation and inspiration for future preservation efforts.

The southern end of Grant Ridge can be visited at Freedom Park, south of the Interstate-70 Marshall Field exit 301.

FINK Beef Genetics

Homeground & Other Geographies by Tom Parker

Preparing for winter the New Mexican way

In retrospect, perhaps the most amazing thing about what happened wasn't that it did (miraculously, unbelievably), but that the people responsible for it happening were utterly clueless about what it meant, its rarity or its significance. Or, for that matter, just what the heck it was.

It being Hatch green chile, advertised in a sales flyer at Kier's Thriftway in Washington not long ago.

The effect upon certain individuals—myself being one of them—was electrifying, if not somewhat surreal. Kansas connoisseurs of green chile are understandably hesitant to accept such claims due to a sizable number of vendors who classify all green chiles as "Hatch," as if the designation was a variety or genus rather than a place of origin. It's difficult enough to find enough fresh green chile to stock up for another year regardless of where it was grown; having to second-guess suppliers over the authenticity of the product is just one more step in a process that often ends in failure.

A friend in Wichita regularly reports on the arrival of several semi-loads of Hatch chile at a home improvement business each September, a short-term affair as they usually sell out within hours. Wichita might seem like a long way to drive to buy Hatch chile but it's a lot closer than New Mexico. To see the chiles advertised at Kier's was nothing short of monumental.

Still, experience had taught me caution, and my phone conversation with Paul, then-acting-produce manager, wasn't encouraging.

Me: I see you have Hatch green chile for sale. Is it available by the case?

Paul: What's that?

Me: Green chile, like hot peppers. It was advertised in your flyer.

Paul: Let me look. (Short delay.) We don't have any.

Instant let-down. My hopes crushed on the shoals of a misprinted newspaper insert.

Paul: But I can get some. My emotional plummet reverses course, skyrockets.

Me: I'll take 50 pounds.

Paul: Give me two days.

I still didn't believe it. Nor would I believe it until I saw with my own eyes the box in Kier's cooler: Young Guns Produce from Hatch, New Mexico.

For transplanted New Mexicans for whom chile is both food staple and religion, the Hatch valley of southern New Mexico is the Mecca of all things chile. Sandwiched between two low mountain ranges and bisected by the Rio Grande River, the soil is loamy, fertile and ideal for chile production. The town of Hatch bills itself the "Chile Capital of the World," and with good reason. The region pumps $300 million into the state's economy and its produce is considered the finest in the world.

Finding it available in Washington was virtually unthinkable. Social networking helped spread the word, instantly triggering requests for details.

A typical response from Kansans, however, was curiosity. Bob, the produce manager at Kier's, wanted to know more about the chile and where it came from, followed by questions about processing the chiles.

"What the heck do you do with it?" he asked.

Well, where to start?

Unlike a bell pepper which is usually diced or sliced and eaten raw or sautéed, chiles need to be roasted to separate the skin from the meat. Roasting can be done over gas or charcoal or broiled in the oven. Place the chiles over a medium hot grill and allow the skin to begin to char; turn with tongs and repeat until the chile is fairly blackened or blistered all over. When completed, transfer the chiles to a bowl covered with a towel, or a paper or plastic sack. This allows the chiles to steam, which makes the skin separate easier. Once the chiles cool, they can be frozen in small batches; I put eight to a pint freezer bag. Some people peel their chiles before freezing but I find it too time-consuming when dealing with large quantities.

Roasting that quantity, in fact, takes a lot of time. Most roadside vendors in New Mexico offer roasting services in huge wire tubs, but I prefer to do it myself. There's something primitive about gathering one's winter provisions, plus the smell of roasting chiles not only triggers my appetite but opens the floodgates of memory. For a half day or more I'm back in the Land of Enchantment, and the aroma is bewitching.

But then, the idea, the concept, of Hatch chile in northeast Kansas is a kind of magical thinking. But in this case it was real, and I have a big pot of chile verde simmering on the stove to prove it. I don't care what winter brings, the Parker family is ready.

Jim Gerrish grazing workshops to focus on improved productivity, profitability and personal satisfaction

Internationally known expert on forage livestock systems, Jim Gerrish of American GrazingLands Services LLC, is returning to Kansas for two 2-day workshops on grazing management as it applies to the livestock business from October 28-31, 2013.

Gerrish has 20 years of systems research and outreach experience as a faculty member at the University of Missouri, as well as many years of commercial cattle and sheep production. University of Missouri's Forage Systems Research Center rose to national prominence as a result of Gerrish's research and leadership. His research encompasses many aspects of plant-soil-animal interactions and provides a foundation for many of the basic principles of management intensive grazing.

When asked why livestock producers might wish to attend the workshop, Gerrish replied, "More than ever, you need to be in control of your operation. Cows are lousy business managers. Don't leave the critical management decisions up to cows. They don't care whether you make a dime or not. Your job is to create a ranch environment where the cow can be the best cow she can be." Gerrish went on to say, "You need to manage the business side of the ranch and not try to do the cow's job for her. If you don't understand what that means, then you really need to attend this workshop."

The workshops will be held October 28-29 at Ramada Hotel, Salina, from 9:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m. and October 30-31 at Pratt Community College, Pratt, from 9:00 a.m.-4:00 p.m. Cost of the workshop is $80.00 which includes handouts and food. Attendees are responsible for their own lodging. These two-day workshops are an extremely "sweet" deal as grazing workshops with experts typically cost much more.

Each two-day workshop will include information and discussion on the following topics: Grazing Basics 101 for Improved Plant Performance, Cattle Management 101, To Hay or Not to Hay, and Designing Grazing Systems including fencing and water development.

Mary Howell, conference organizer, highly recommends ranchers attend. "Producers will gain an understanding of plant growth, extending the grazing season, matching calving season and animal performance to available forage resources and the environment," Howell said. "One afternoon will be spent on fencing and water development; the two most limiting factors in grazing possibilities. Jim shares with producers his abundant knowledge and experience he has gained from extensive travel working with ranchers everywhere." Howell noted, "We are very fortunate to offer this opportunity for such an affordable price. Plan to attend, learn how plants, animals, and grazing all fit together; feel free bring your questions."

Funding for the Gerrish workshops was provided by the North Central Risk Management Education Center, the USDA National Institute of Food and Agriculture, His events are always well attended with producers leaving with a different way of looking at why they do things the way they do, and perhaps exploring ways they can reduce work and increase profits. Partners for the grant are Kansas Farmers Union, Kansas Graziers, NRCS, Kansas Grazing Land Coalition, and Kansas Center for Sustainable Agriculture and Alternative Crops. For more information and registration visit: kansasgraziers.blogspot.com or contact Mary Howell at kfu.mary@gmail.com or 785-562-8726.

Report outlines quality of 2013 Kansas wheat crop

By Dalton Henry

A recent report sheds light on the quality that end-users can expect from the 2013 Kansas wheat crop.

National Ag Statistics and the Kansas Grain Inspection Service released the annual Wheat Quality report in September. The crop averaged 60.9 pounds per bushel, almost right on the ten-year average, but down slightly from last year's 61.1 pounds.

Protein content, which is closely watched by millers and bakers, both domestically and abroad, averaged 12.2 percent, down from the 12.4 percent ten-year average. The western crop reporting districts led the state in protein content, with all three districts at or above last year and long term averages. Conversely, the central and east regions, where the wheat crop was less heat and drought stressed had protein levels below ten-year averages. Statewide, moisture content averaged 10.9 percent, down from the 11.1 percent last year and from 11.3 percent for the ten-year average.

Samples of wheat grading No. 1, at 85 percent, were up 2 points from 83 percent last year. Fourteen percent graded No. 2, compared to 16 percent in 2012, and for the second year in a row, only 1 percent graded No. 3 or below. Wheat samples averaged 0.2 percent damaged kernels, same as 2012 but down from 0.4 for the 10-year average. Samples tested had less than 0.1 percent foreign material on average, the same as 2012 but below the 10-year average. Shrunken and broken kernels averaged 1.4 percent, unchanged from 2012 but slightly higher than the ten-year average of 1.2. Average dockage for all samples was 0.6 percent, up slightly from last year.

Justin Gilpin, CEO of Kansas Wheat commented that the report shows that producing quality wheat continues to be something Kansas farmers are good at, and that quality continues to be an effective marketing tool in international markets.

"Each year as we host international buyers on trade teams, and as U.S. Wheat Associates works with buyers abroad, we are able to consistently provide higher quality wheat that meets customers' demands," said Gilpin. "Although we are early in 2013/2014 crop marketing year, so far U.S. grown hard red winter is competing very well in exports, posting strong sales year-to-date."

The report, a copy of which is available at www.kswheat.com, is based on 16,143 carlot samples from 51 counties.

This data tracks very closely with samples collected by Plains Grains Inc, a private, non-profit wheat marketing organization that focuses on collecting and communicating information about yearly crop quality to the entire wheat value chain.

Plains Grains executive director Mark Hodges noted that although there was a lot of variability in this year's crop one area that is a real highlight is baking quality.

"Comparing this year's data with last year's, we are seeing a significant increase in key baking measures such as loaf volume," said Hodges. Additional milling and baking quality information will be available in mid-October when Plains Grains is expected to release their analysis and data for the entire hard red winter wheat crop in the 2013 Crop Quality publication.

Plains Grains maintains an interactive mapping tool allowing users to view crop details such as protein content, moisture level, dockage percent, test weight and thousand kernel weight all by detailed grainshed areas. The interactive maps and final quality report can be viewed at www.plains-grains.org

CHASE COUNTY ~ 322 ACRES FLINT HILLS GRASS

AUCTION

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24 — 7:00 PM
Auction Location: Chicken House — OLPE, KANSAS
SELLERS: MARK OWENS, THOMAS OWENS & PAULINE COULTER

LOCATION: From Olpe, Kansas, west on paved road 70th 1.5 miles to J5 Rd, north 1 mile to Rd. 80th. West 8.6 miles on county gravel road which dead ends at the northeast corner of said property.

This half section is fenced with average to above average fence on all 4 sides. Good pond on the north side along with a couple of small catch ponds. Pasture has a few trees around an old homestead site with the original stone cellar still in place. A windmill is on the east, but is not functional. Years ago part of the pasture was cultivated, but has long since been put back to grass. Native Bluestem and mixed grasses offer livestock grazing in the heart of the Flint Hills. Access is by a minimum maintenance road for the last mile, but is very well graveled for good access.

All information has been gathered from Chase County sources and is considered accurate, but is not guaranteed. All statements made the evening of auction will take precedence over advertisements.

Grain sorghum lipids can lower cholesterol, intestinal inflammation

Grain sorghum lipids lower cholesterol levels and intestinal bowel inflammation in lab animals, University of Nebraska-Lincoln research has found, and scientists are working to figure out exactly how in an attempt to create food products that could manage both conditions in humans.

The research is part of UNL's emphasis on "functional foods," which are dietary systems containing natural agents designed to impart certain health benefits, including prevention of a variety of diseases. The work involves scientists from several disciplines.

Reducing LDL cholesterol is a key strategy to reducing coronary heart disease, which is a major cause of death in the United States and other countries. Statin drugs are effective and widely prescribed, but they are expensive and can have serious side effects. Moreover, inflammation of the bowel has been linked to many intestinal disorders, including colon cancer. Scientists from UNL and elsewhere are trying to find nondrug strategies, such as functional foods, to replace drugs.

That's where grain sorghum comes in, said Vicki Schlegel, UNL food scientist and part of the research team. It is a rich source of several chemicals that can decrease cholesterol in addition to preventing inflammation but has been largely overlooked for human consumption in the U.S. Although the U.S. is the world's leading producer and exporter of grain sorghum, most of the crop in this country is used for animal feed and ethanol production.

The UNL research focused on the extractable lipid fraction of grain sorghum whole kernels and their effect on cholesterol metabolism in hamsters, which have similar lipid cholesterol metabolism as humans.

Scientists found that hamsters fed a diet supplemented with grain sorghum lipids had significantly lower cholesterol and liver cholesterol levels, Schlegel said.

"These concentrations were in the metabolic ranges known to reduce the risk of coronary heart disease in humans," the Institute of Agriculture and Natural Resources scientist added. "They probably prevented cholesterol from absorbing through the large intestine. It just passed through."

"We also recently determined that the fatty diet fed to the animals not only increased cholesterol but also intestinal inflammation. However, sorghum supplementation was able to remediate many markers of this cellular stress. How it does this, well, that is the next step in our research," Schlegel added.

Ongoing research includes determining the specific components responsible for both responses. Then, scientists hope to incorporate those into a food ingredient for humans.

In addition to its human-health implications, such ingredients also could raise the value of sorghum for producers, Schlegel noted. Although the UNL research focused on whole kernel sorghum, the components responsible for these health benefits also can be extracted from sorghum-ethanol byproducts, which would improve the economics of that ethanol production since those byproducts now are used, if at all, as animal feed.

This research is funded by the Nebraska Grain Sorghum Board, United Sorghum Checkoff Program, and UNL's Agricultural Research Division.

BAXTER BLACK

ON THE EDGE OF COMMON SENSE

Winch Up

A while back I decided to build up my ranching reputation by improving my equipment. I purchased a 1997 crew cab GMC one-ton diesel with only 254,000 miles on it. I traded in a '74 one-ton flat bed F350 with a winch, plus $4,000. I asked the used car dealer if I could keep the winch. He said it was the only reason he took the flatbed in trade!

Cal told me his neighbor Jerry came by to show him his new purchase. A brand-spankin' new ¾ ton four-wheel drive with payments of $600 a month over five years... but, what Jerry was most proud of was a 20-ton winch with 50' of cable mounted on the front bumper. Jerry talked Cal into goin' to check cows with him. It was a beautiful fall day in the Palouse country of Idaho. Miles of yellow pasture and wheat stubble, not a tree in sight. As they motored through the herd they noticed a cow with a lump on her jaw, one big teat and, what looked like a bundle of wire around one foot.

Together these cowmen decided to catch her, tie her to a fence to remove the wire and maybe lance the lump. They rifled through his toolbox and found an old rope and a halter with no lead rope. Cal easily caught the cooperative cow and haltered her. Before he could get the rope attached, Jerry suggested that he hook the winch to the halter. It was just an excuse to play with his new toy.

They pulled 20' of cable from the winch and hooked it to the halter. Jerry stood by the winch with the remote in his hand like Theodore Roosevelt in a backhoe about to take his first bite out of the Panama Canal... modern man versus Mother Nature.

The cow immediately pulled back and went ballistic! She raced to the right till the cable tightened and swung her around the pickup behind the right rear wheel well! She managed to take Jerry out with the cable, broke off the headlight, tore off the side mirror and bashed in the rear fender.

As soon as Jerry arose, the cow reversed course and made the left side symmetrical! Jerry climbed on the hood, remote in hand, as the cow continued to swing back and forth pen-dularly, from one side to the other.

By the time she was reeled in tight to the winch, the pickup looked like it had been in a dogfight with a switch engine! One tail-light survived, unlike both headlights, side panels, mirrors and the driver's side window.

They removed the tangle of wire and wisely decided to cut the nylon halter off with a pocket knife rather than give her some slack and try to unbuckle it.

Good thinking, I'd say.

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crofts

The scheduled time for the October Supply and Demand report has come and gone and we don't know if or when it will ever be released. My guess right now is that if the government is reopened by Friday the 18th that the report will be released on Friday the 25th, but then traders will question whether or not USDA is using the same data that they would have under normal circumstances. I kind of think maybe they should just skip the October report and we should all wait for the November report. Of course this is all based on the assumption that the government will be reopened by then and I suppose that there is no guarantee of that.

Looking at the grain markets, the December corn fell to a new low for the move and it looks like this market will slowly, but surely reach the $4.25 area. About the only information we have to work with right now are yield reports and the yields, for the most part, are very good, which leads to fears of a higher yield estimate if we ever get any USDA data. The corn has been trading in a very choppy manner and one should expect that to remain the norm. I don't look for a major move in either direction until we see fresh supply and demand numbers.

The wheat has been very choppy as well, but of course the wheat is at the highest level we have seen in months as opposed to making new lows like the corn. We continue to hear talk of good export business and high domestic prices in China. The fundamental outlook of the wheat market is still very bullish and the next round of data from USDA will confirm that. The overbought condition of the market is being relieved by going sideways and barring a financial calamity we should see the wheat begin another leg higher very soon.

The soybeans are stuck between good yield reports and huge demand numbers. When USDA opens back up there will be some very large export sales to report. Traders are afraid to push the market very hard in either direction because the next production estimate will have a huge impact on price direction regardless of how many soybeans the Chinese buy. If production is a disappointment it will be very easy to go back to thinking bullish thoughts.

Some of the biggest excitement has been in the feeder cattle market. We are now knocking on the door of $170. With the live cattle creeping higher and the corn creeping lower we are creating a perfect environment for speculating on feeder cattle. Things would get really bullish if the cash cattle market would make it to $130. That would definitely generate some bullish enthusiasm.

Shutdown spawns vacuum in farm market information

(AP) — When Tim Peterson finished planting his 900 acres of winter wheat last week, the usually market-savvy Kansas farmer unexpectedly found himself struggling to make critical marketing decisions without being able to access to vital agricultural reports, casualties of the federal government shutdown.

“We have no clue what is going on in the market,” said Peterson, who farms near Monument in northwest Kansas. He typically protects his investment in seed and fertilizer by “locking in” the price his wheat crop will fetch next July with a futures contract that shields farmers from market fluctuations by guaranteeing a price while the crop is in the ground.

Farmers and livestock producers use the reports put out by the National Agriculture Statistics Service to make decisions — such as how to price crops, which commodities to grow and when to sell them — as well as track cattle auction prices. Not only has the NASS stopped putting out new reports about demand and supply, exports and prices, but all websites with past information have been taken down.

“It is causing a direct void in information that is immediate,” Peterson said.

This worries him far more than his other problem: When will his $20,000 subsidy check from the government, which usually comes in October, arrive?

Since the U.S. Agriculture Department’s local farm services offices also have been shuttered, farmers can’t apply for new loans, sign up acreages for government programs or receive government checks for programs they’re already enrolled in. And at a time when researchers who are seeking new wheat varieties and plant traits should be planting experimental plots, all work has ground to a halt.

Kansas Farmer’s Union president Donn Teske, a grower in the northeast Kansas town of Wheaton, worried about payments he’s owed for idling some environmentally sensitive land under the Conservation Reserve Program.

“I always look forward to that check coming in the mail,” the 58-year-old said.

But all of that, farmers say, pales in comparison to the lack of agriculture reports, because farmers today depend far more on global marketplaces than government payouts.

The reports, for instance, can alert them to shortfalls in overseas markets or if there’s a wide swing in acres planted, both of which would prompt U.S. growers to plant extra crops to meet those demands or hang on to a harvest longer to get a better price.

“That information is worth a lot of money, a lot more than $20,000 a year,” Peterson said, a reference to his subsidy.

Major commodity players can pay for crop size estimates usually provided in the NASS reports from “private sources,” said Dalton Henry, director of governmental affairs for the industry group Kansas Wheat. “Producers aren’t going to have that same luxury,” he said.

During the shutdown, the USDA won’t provide sales reports from Oklahoma livestock auctions that are used to help set prices on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange, state Department of Agriculture employee Jack Carson said.

“We are working. They are not,” Carson said.

Another ripple effect is that farmers may see a delay in checks they’re owed from federal support programs, said Wisconsin agriculture secretary Ben Brancel.

Brancel also noted that his office heard from a farmer on the first day of the shutdown who had received a check for a cow he sold, but because he had a Farm Service Agency loan, he couldn’t cash it without obtaining a signature from an FSA official.

“Our advice to him was he was going to have to wait, that there wasn’t anything he could do about it,” he said.

The shutdown came just as the current farm bill expired. Farm subsidies remain intact for fall crops currently being harvested. Crop insurance, funded under a permanent authorization, is mostly unaffected.

The expiration of the law won’t have an impact until the end of the year, when some dairy supports end and milk prices are expected to rise sharply.

Congress has been debating the new farm bill for more than two years, but a resolution has likely taken a back seat.

“Farmers, all of those impacted, have been waiting and waiting and waiting. And frankly have had enough,” said Senate Agriculture Chairwoman Debbie Stabenow, D-Mich., last week. “They want this to get done.”

Osage County Fair’s grand champion steer was shown by Morgan Woodbury. Judging the show was Ryan McKoon, Paola.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Due to the government shutdown, there is no Kansas Hay Market report available.

The River Valley District Livestock Judging Team includes Jefferson Simmons, Wyatt Durst, and Andrew Tiemeyer.

River Valley District 4-H Livestock Judging Team Competes at Ak-Sar-Ben stock show

The Knights of Ak-Sar-Ben (Nebraska spelled backwards) is a non-profit organization whose mission is "building a more prosperous Heartland." Part of fulfilling this mission is to offer an annual stock show "to encourage 4-H youths to learn and apply practical livestock production, management, and marketing skills." Every year over 2,000 4-H families from all over the midwest travel to Omaha, Neb. to compete in this stock show. This year twenty-three teams from sixteen different states, along with many individual participants, competed in the 4-H Livestock Judging Contest on September 28th. Only the top teams from each state are invited to the contest. Contestants had to judge 12 classes of livestock, giving reasons on four of those classes and answering questions on two other classes.

The River Valley District 4-H team of Jefferson Simmons, Wyatt Durst, and Andrew Tiemeyer left their mark in a big way with a 2nd place finish in the swine division, a 7th place finish in reasons, 11th place finish in beef, and 8th place overall in the contest. Out of 91 competitors, Wyatt Durst was 4th highest individual in the beef division, 3rd highest in swine, and 6th highest in reasons. Jefferson Simmons also placed well individually with 10th place in Sheep/Goats, 13th in Swine, and 19th overall in the competition.

Ramona Tiemeyer chaperoned the team to Omaha for the competition.

KDA, KDHE to discuss regulatory requirements at forums for livestock producers

The Kansas Department of Agriculture (KDA) Dairy Inspection Program and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment (KDHE) Livestock Waste and Management section will host three forums across the state to explain regulatory requirements and to aid Kansas stockmen and dairymen in successfully completing the inspection process required to meet licensing guidelines.

The forums will be held Nov. 7 in Seneca at 9:30 a.m. at the Nemaha County Community Building; Nov. 13 in Hutchinson at Carey Park Homebuilders Shelter at 2 p.m.; and Nov. 14 in Garden City at the Southwest Research and Extension Center at 9 a.m.

The forums are intended to provide information for Kansas stockmen and dairymen to have greater understanding of the inspection and regulatory process. Program managers from KDA and KDHE will help farmers and ranchers avoid common mistakes found during inspections and cover future regulations that may affect the livestock sector.

Livestock producers who work regularly with the KDHE Livestock Waste Management section on regulations and all dairy farmers are encouraged to attend.

The KDA Division of Conservation will also be available to share information regarding the programs they have available to assist producers.

For more information about the forums, contact Billy Brown, KDA agribusiness development coordinator, at Billy.Brown@kda.ks.gov or (785) 296-4172.

mentary in Coffeyville. As a kindergarten teacher, Price utilizes a local pumpkin patch to teach her students about agriculture. She shows them the different stages of a pumpkin, then they weigh and measure them and count the seeds. They also learn that the food they eat isn't just from the grocery store.

"Children learn that the pizza they eat is made from things that farmers produce," Price says. "They learn that the eggs and bacon they eat come from farms."

Tamala Snyder teaches ninth through 12th grades at Prairie View High School in LaCygne. As a math teacher, she implements agriculture as a teaching tool to teach algebra and calculus. She says she often gets calls from local farmers on how to measure area or volume. Snyder teaches math concepts by using agricultural related examples such as feed rations.

These five teachers will receive their choice of $600 toward attending the National Agriculture in the Classroom Conference in Hershey, Pa., or a $200 gift certificate to purchase agriculture education supplies for their classroom.

Horse Care 101 Educational Seminar coming to KSU

The Kansas Horse Council in conjunction with the Kansas State University College of Veterinary Medicine will host the second annual Horse Care 101 Educational Seminar. The event will be held at the KSU Vet School on Saturday, Nov. 9th beginning at 8:00 a.m.

Featured presenter is Dr. Robert Miller, world-renowned speaker and author especially recognized for his ground-breaking foal training method known as Imprint Training. Dr. Miller was at the forefront of the "natural horsemanship" movement. Also, back by popular demand will be horse behaviorist Dr. Randall Raub.

Following presentations in the morning, attendees will be provided lunch and participate in small group, hands-on experience labs in the afternoon led by Dr. Chris Blevins, Dr. Robert Miller and members of the Kansas Farriers Association.

Registration can be completed online at www.k-state.edu/vet/khc or by calling the KSU Office of Continuing Education at 785-532-4528. Students $12, Adults $25 and Veterinary Professionals/CE $80

This is open to the public with a special focus on 4-H, FFA youth and first-time horse owners. However, the expertise and knowledge provided by Dr. Miller and others will appeal to all horsemen and women, novice or experienced.

K-State agronomy experts win awards

Several Kansas State University faculty members and one student will receive prestigious awards for their contributions to agronomy through education, research and service.

The Crop Science Society of America (CSSA), Soil Science Society of America (SSSA) and American Society of Agronomy (ASA) will present their 2013 awards Nov. 3-6 during the international annual meeting of the societies in Tampa, Fla.

2013 award winners from K-State include:

- Guihua Bai, professor of agronomy, and Daniel Sweeney, professor of soil and water management, were elected as prestigious CSSA Fellows. Only .3 percent of all active and emeritus members may be elected CSSA Fellows in any given year.

- Sruthi Narayanan, a K-State Ph.D. student in agronomy, received the CSSA Gerald O. Mott Scholarship for Meritorious Graduate Students in Crop Science.

- Nathan Nelson, K-State associate professor of soil fertility and nutrient management, received the Agronomic Resident Education Award from the ASA.

- Kraig Roozeboom, Dorivar Ruiz Diaz, and Curtis Thompson—all faculty members of K-State's Department of Agronomy—will receive an ASA Extension Excellence Award for the publication titled, "Diagnosing Corn Production Problems in Kansas."

- James Shroyer, K-State professor and extension crop production specialist, received the Crop Science Teaching Award from the CSSA.

Herd expansion means tighter supply first

By Lyndee Stabel

In a room full of cattle feeders, an Oklahoma State University (OSU) livestock marketing specialist had everyone's full attention as he said there is no way around it: In the next two to three years, the already short supply of feeder cattle will only get tighter. OSU Breedlove Professor Derrell Peel described the current feeder cattle situation and the circumstances leading to it at the eighth annual Feeding Quality Forum in Omaha, Neb., and Garden City last month.

With a U.S. cattle inventory at levels not seen since 1952, "We're much smaller than we ever intended to be," Peel said. Drought and other circumstances led producers to liquidate their cow herds 15 out of the last 17 years, despite recent market signals to expand. Peel expects that to change. Throughout much of the U.S., drought conditions have improved, opening the door to herd rebuilding. Instead of looking for the likeliest animals to cull, many producers will begin looking for the best heifers to keep. "For the next several years I would expect the (heifer replacement) percentage to be above average," Peel said. "And that has implications to what happens to feeder supplies in the short run."

Growing the cattle population is the ultimate solution to the limited feeder supply, but it is not an instant fix. Until a heifer starts calving, each replacement kept is one less animal available for feeding. Cattle feeders already competing for a piece of that small supply know but don't relish the fact, but "it will get worse before it gets better."

Even so, Peel is optimistic about the growth rate of the national herd. Many producers were forced to cull heavily during the drought, but they did not do it at the expense of their herds' quality. Many heifers were kept and older cows were sold. "We've probably got this herd as young and productive as maybe it has ever been," Peel said. "When we do start to expand, we have the capability for a year or two to expand faster than what we could have probably seen otherwise."

Growth will still take time. Peel expects it to be 2017 before herd numbers can even recover to 2011 pre-drought levels. Strong markets for feeders will continue to pull in a share of animals and moderate herd growth.

Cattle imported from Canada and Mexico make up only a small portion of the feeder cattle market, but Peel said the industry cannot expect extra animals from these sources to help supplement its own limited supply.

Mexico contended with its own extreme drought and liquidated much of its herd, many of those animals entering the U.S. "Last year we got just short of 1.5 million head of cattle from Mexico," Peel said. "That is not a sustainable number. Those exports were at the expense of their ability to produce in the future."

Already the results are evident, with 450,000 fewer head imported from Mexico, year-to-date compared to last year.

And with Canada rebuilding its own national herd, those imports will remain relatively low.

All these factors lead Peel to believe the coming years will see the number of feeder cattle fall even further than the 3.5% decline projected by the end of this year.

Even though overall herd numbers have been declining since the 1970s, the number of cattle on feed has not followed the same pattern. The industry has been able to keep those numbers up by feeding cattle more intensively and at a younger age so cattle move more slowly through the feeding process. For every calf on feed during the early '70s and '80s, there were three more available to replace it. By last year, less than two calves were available for every one calf on feed.

Years of cheap corn prices made it profitable to buy smaller calves to feed over a longer period of time. "The question is, what has to go on to go forward, because over the last few years, that hasn't been true," Peel said. He projected price relationships between cattle weights and cost of gain, given a range of corn prices that should trend lower.

All these circumstances may lead to other unusual premiums. "I think there is a good chance that when we get really low with herd expansion, we will see much less discount on heifers relative to steers," Peel speculated. "You may even see heifers bring premiums this year because the breeding female demand on top of the tremendous demand for the feeder animal will be there."

Such strong market signals for more feeder cattle would typically send producers into high gear to expand their herds and calf crops, but for many American cattlemen today the situation is not that simple. Most producers are more than 62 years old, and at this point in life they are not looking to increase their workload.

When you show a lot of older producers the potential that is out there from the cow calf standpoint, they say, "Yeah, I see all of that, but it ain't going to be me. It's going to be someone else," Peel said, but who will that "someone else" be? Getting into the cattle business is not an easy task.

The next generation of cattlemen cannot borrow enough money to get started, so Peel said it is up to the older ranchers to help get them in business. He suggested looking at different financial arrangements such as long-term contracts or lease arrangements to transfer equity to the next wave of producers.

No matter who takes on the challenge, the fact remains that the market needs more feeder cattle than are available today. "Now the question is how far do we need to grow, and how fast can we do it," Peel said.

K-State evaluates fall applications to combat alfalfa weevil

The alfalfa weevil, one of the most well-known and devastating pests to agriculture, can cause serious defoliation in alfalfa during the spring, if not treated in a timely manner. Producers might have difficulty spraying insecticides timely in the spring, as spring alfalfa weevil activity can be intense for a period of three to six weeks, and spring weather is unpredictable.

Researchers at Kansas State University are evaluating an alternative treatment strategy that consists of spraying insecticides on alfalfa in the fall, followed by a spring application. Adult weevils become active in alfalfa fields in the fall where they feed, mate and start laying eggs in alfalfa stems, said Jeff Whitworth, K-State Research and Extension entomologist.

"We're not trying to eliminate the weevils in the fall," Whitworth said. "We're just trying to reduce egg laying so that it will help out in the spring."

In addition to Whitworth, the research team at K-State includes Alysha Soper, research assistant, and Holly Davis, insect diagnostician. The study began in the fall of 2012 to determine if a fall insecticide application significantly reduced spring infestations of the alfalfa weevil, and if so, what fall application timing would be most effective.

Understanding alfalfa weevil behavior is helpful in understanding the reasoning behind this study. The alfalfa weevil is a univoltine insect, Whitworth said, which means there is one generation produced each year. The weevils produced in the spring, from mid-March to mid-May, leave the alfalfa fields for the most part when temperatures get around 85 degrees Fahrenheit (85 F).

The alfalfa weevil can especially harm the first cutting, but the effects often transcend that first cutting to cause reduced quality and growth. Those weevils that aren't destroyed in that first cutting will leave alfalfa fields and go to cooler and shadier places. A few stay in leaf litter in fields, Whitworth said, but most will come back in the fall to lay eggs around mid-October. The eggs, and some adult weevils, will overwinter inactively on the plant and in the leaf litter. Anytime the temperatures get above 48 F though, the weevils become active and continue laying eggs until temperatures cool again.

In the fall of 2011, Whitworth said chemical companies came up with registered insecticide fall application, which complied with the Kansas Department of Agriculture. It was too late in 2011 to test the fall application, so in 2012, the K-State research team put together a study to see if spraying adults in the fall would reduce spring infestation.

The researchers started the fall insecticide applications two weeks after detecting the first adult weevil. The first application last year was Oct. 9, the second on Oct. 23, the third on Nov. 6 and the fourth on Nov. 20. They evaluated alfalfa for weevils this spring on April 5 and April 12.

Results showed that the third application had less alfalfa weevils per stem compared to the other application dates.

"From a statistical standpoint, Nov. 6 (insecticide application) showed significantly reduced infestation in the spring," Whitworth said.

Although they were statistically reduced, Whitworth said from a practical standpoint they were not reduced enough to prevent significant damage if not treated in the spring. He said producers should keep in mind that most conventional synthetic-organic insecticides provide two to three weeks residual activity, and knowing this is helpful in determining the most effective application time to delay egg laying and eggs from hatching.

The findings are preliminary, based on one year of study, but the researchers studied large plots of alfalfa from six different fields. The researchers will continue studying this fall and evaluate again in the spring of 2014.

For more information about this research, visit the K-State Research and Extension bookstore (www.ksre.ksu.edu/bookstore/pub/s/mf2999.pdf).

A silent yield killer

By Josh Coltrain, Crop Production Agent,Wildcat Extension District

Mayetiola destructor. Sounds almost like a monster in one of the old mutant lizard movies right? Actually, this is the scientific name for what we commonly call Hessian fly. This pest is often ranked as the most important insect pest in winter wheat, even though some in our area would argue that some aphids are just as important.

I have often wondered the origin of the name Hessian fly. It was first observed in New York in 1779 near a Hessian soldier encampment and this is where the name came from. It was first detected in Kansas in 1871. From 1900 to 1970, only one in every four years or so was classified as being free from fly injury. From the 1970s to the 90s, infestations were lower, but the incidence has increased recently.

For 140 years, Hessian fly has been a voracious pest of wheat, causing untold yield loss. However, before we proceed to its life cycle, it must be pointed out that there are no control methods available once the crop has been infested. The only management strategy available to producers is prevention.

A Hessian fly adult is tiny, about 1/8 inch long that would look like a gnat. The adults emerge from August through November on warm days. After mating, females lay eggs in the leaf grooves of wheat seedlings. The eggs themselves resemble the early stages of leaf rust and can be seen by the naked eye.

In three to ten days the eggs hatch tiny larvae that move downward during the night when humidity is relatively high. The larvae, technically maggots, cannot survive being left exposed on the surface of the leaf. The larvae feed on the plant by taking sap from near the base of the plant for a week to a month. They often make a home between the leaf sheath and the main stem.

Full grown maggots are white, legless, headless, and about 3/16 of an inch long. They gradually form brown, 1/8 inch capsule-like cases (puparia). This stage is commonly called the flaxseed stage as they greatly resemble the seed from a flax plant. The pest overwinters in this stage and also over-summers (for lack of a better term) as well.

Symptoms from fall infestations are not always obvious. The infested shoot may be stunted, or even killed. If infestation occurs during seedling emergence, an entire stand may be killed, but this is rare. One of the signs to scout for infestation is an undeveloped central shoot with broad, thickened, and bluish leaves. Though remember, even if the infestation is confirmed, there are no treatments to remedy the problem.

Even though there is no treatment, identifying the amount of infestation is an important step in proper management. Once the level of infestation is understood, other management practices may be implemented.

Infested stubble should be destroyed. Research studies have shown that thorough incorporation can accomplish this. These studies showed that if the residue was buried to a depth of one inch, only 26 percent of the Hessian flies would emerge. At two inches, the percentage drops to 6 percent. Burning has also been shown to destroy the flaxseeds above ground, but there can be flaxseed survive because fast-moving fires do not destroy low enough in the crown.

Hessian fly is more of an issue in a continuous wheat system, so crop rotation is highly recommended. Also, there is a fly-free date. In the Wildcat Extension District, the fly-free date is October 12th or 13th. In theory, waiting to plant until after this date allows for the fall flies to emerge and die before the wheat can be infested. However, many factors can play a role in whether or not this strategy works, most important of which s the relative mildness of a given late fall/winter.

As with most wheat pests, volunteer wheat is the perfect host for Hessian fly. Due to this, volunteer wheat should be destroyed. Not destroying volunteer can render other management strategies ineffective as well. Unfortunately, this also applies to your neighbors volunteer as well.

K-State’s Buchholz honored for service to Extension

A calling came in graduate school. Getting involved in graduate studies, doing agricultural research, and realizing that the outcomes of that research went far beyond laboratories and paper helped Daryl Buchholz realize that a career in extension was meant for him.

“My real interest was not so much in doing research or the outcomes of the research itself, but rather trying to look at it from a practical perspective of how it was going to help agriculture,” Buchholz said. “Much of that was driven by the fact that I was surrounded by individuals who had extension responsibilities as faculty members when I was a student.”

Buchholz, associate director for extension and applied research at Kansas State University, provides the vision and leadership needed for daily operations of the Kansas Cooperative Extension Service. He has been with K-State Research and Extension since 1992, although his work as an extension professional spans more than 33 years.

For his dedication to extension, Buchholz was recently honored with the Epsilon Sigma Phi (ESP) Distinguished Service Ruby Award, the highest award granted in extension nationwide, at the Galaxy IV Conference Sept. 16-20 in Pittsburgh, Pa. The conference, hosted every five years by the Joint Council of Extension Professionals, is a national professional improvement conference for extension organizations.

Although he discovered his calling for extension work in graduate school, Buchholz, a native of South Dakota, said he has experienced extension in some way throughout his life.

First, it was the Belmont Baby Beef 4-H Club, where Buchholz said he took part in projects including livestock, clothing, horticulture, foods and others that his parents thought would help him become a confident, well-rounded individual and leader. He followed his 4-H days by attending South Dakota State University and becoming the first-generation college graduate in his family.

Buchholz then moved on to pursue graduate degrees at two other land-grant universities—Oklahoma State University for a master’s degree and Kansas State University for a Ph.D. He worked in the University of Missouri’s agronomy department as an extension soil fertility specialist for 12 years before returning to K-State, where he has served in a number of leadership roles.

As an associate professor of agronomy, Buchholz put his practical outlook to use. He developed and implemented extension programs in soil fertility, fertilizer use efficiency, soil testing, environmental and water quality, no-till cropping management, and site-specific crop management to assist growers, dealers, and the public in understanding principles of nutrient management and using those principles for agricultural improvement.

To this day, he stresses the need to find practical solutions to challenges faced by all Kansans, which includes the five grand challenges for Kansas recently identified by K-State Research and Extension—water, health, feeding the world, community vitality and growing tomorrow’s leaders.

“In terms of the resources Kansas is blessed to have, I look at those five challenges as challenges that say, ‘Let’s do all that we can possibly do to preserve, protect and enhance those resources,’” Buchholz said.

In looking at the future of extension and its ability to remain relevant and strong, especially when addressing the grand challenges, Buchholz said one of the greatest things accomplished during his tenure with K-State Research and Extension was the development of extension districts across the state. Now, 42 counties operating in multi-county districts, sets K-State Research and Extension in a position to be more valuable in allowing agents to specialize and better meet the needs of all Kansans.

Extension, Buchholz said, is also about continuously improving. It’s about helping people trust the solutions that assist in their needs and take personal ownership of them. He challenges all extension professionals to make personal connections with others to build that trust.

“We are a human development organization, which means we help people make connections, we help people understand opportunities, and we do that through all of our subject matter areas,” Buchholz said. “Don’t let technology separate you from who you’re working with. You need to stay, in some way, physically connected.”

The 100th anniversary of the Smith-Lever Act, a U.S. federal law enacted in 1914 that established the cooperative extension service, is approaching. In his acceptance speech for the Ruby Award, Buchholz said this anniversary can be a reminder of why extension exists. He said he has a positive outlook for the future of extension, as there will always be a need to provide non-biased, research-based information to people focused on improving their lives.

“I do believe that the future of extension is extremely strong,” Buchholz said. “It requires us to remain focused on our audiences and to keep our ears open to knowing and understanding the problems they face, understanding those as deeply as we possibly can, and come back with the kinds of education and opportunities people are going to value.”

Buchholz, who in 2013 also chaired the national extension director’s governing committee, said he believes the kind of people who gravitate toward becoming extension professionals are the ones who have the desire help others.

A lifetime of involvement in extension seems fitting for a man, who said that more than anything, helping and lifting up others is what he enjoys the most about his job.

“It isn’t about agriculture, natural resources, family and consumer sciences, 4-H youth development or community development,” Buchholz said in his acceptance speech. “Rather, it’s about changing people, communities, society in such ways as to lift them up to a better place.”

Buchholz said his colleagues and family—wife Joyce, and three daughters, Joan, Anne and Gina—have always supported his career.

Buchholz has received numerous other professional awards, including national awards such as the 2010 Diversity/Multicultural Team Award for the Change Agent State Catalyst for Diversity, 2004 Meritorious Service Award, 2002 Team Award for the Kansas Environmental Leadership Program and the 2002 International Service Award.

Specifically to K-State Research and Extension, Buchholz won the 2004 Builder Award, 2001 Team Award for the Distance Diagnosis Project and the 1997 Team Award for the Atrazine Education Project.

He is a member of the Alpha Rho Chapter of ESP, the Kansas extension chapter. ESP (www.espnational.org) is a professional society dedicated to fostering standards of excellence in the extension system and developing the extension profession and professional.

Top ag-producing Kansas counties overlay the Ogallala Aquifer

Of the 105 total counties in Kansas, the top eight counties for market value of agricultural products sold border one another. Coincidence or commonality?

According to the 2007 U.S. Census of Agriculture, those top eight Kansas counties for agricultural production are located in western Kansas. The counties—Scott, Haskell, Finney, Gray, Grant, Ford, Wichita and Seward—together sold more than $4.7 billion in crops and livestock. The eight-county contribution represents about one-third of total agricultural revenue for the entire state of Kansas.

Ernie Minton, K-State Research and Extension associate director for research and technology transfer, said one very important thing that ties all of these counties together is a vast water resource—the Ogallala Aquifer. The aquifer, which encompasses more than 170,000 square miles, supports both crop and livestock production not only in western Kansas but also in the seven other states it touches, from South Dakota to Texas.

David Steward, a professor of civil engineering at Kansas State University, and a team of researchers recently completed a study that examined the future of the Ogallala Aquifer. The study found that if current usage of the aquifer continues, as much as 69 percent of the aquifer would be depleted by 2060.

Usage is exceeding the recharge of the aquifer, which has led to its depletion. This is a concern for farmers and ranchers and could also be a major factor in the viability of the Kansas economy. Irrigated corn and beef cattle are two major economic drivers in western Kansas, including those top eight counties.

“The scenario is that irrigation drives corn production that is either directly fed to feedlot cattle or run through ethanol plants, then distillers grains fed to cattle,” Minton said. “Together, between cattle and crop production, this represents a significant amount of economic activity in the state that could be at risk if the aquifer can no longer support irrigation.”

K-State recognizes the importance of agriculture in the state of Kansas, which is why the College of Agriculture and K-State Research and Extension are committed to production agriculture and ensuring it remains resilient and commercially viable. This commitment is expressed in the recently completed K-State 2025 strategic plan www.k-state.edu/2025/documents/K-State-2025-Agriculture_and_KSRE-Strategic-Direction-Action-and-Alignment-Plan-Aug-2013.pdf for the College of Agriculture and K-

State Research and Extension.

Among the many goals included in the plan is the goal of addressing grand challenges in dryland agriculture, which are of particular interest in western Kansas.

“That particular goal in our strategic plan is really about providing growers in western Kansas with cropping alternatives for dryland or limited irrigation scenarios that will help us prolong the lifespan of the aquifer,” said John Floros, dean of the College of Agriculture and director of K-State Research and Extension.

A breakdown of agricultural market value for each of those top eight ag-producing counties is as follows:

- Scott: $72 million for crops; $691 million for livestock; $763 million total
- Haskell: $116 million for crops; $602 million for livestock; $718 million total
- Finney: $141 million for crops; $553 million for livestock; $694 million total

- Gray: $109 million for crops; $582 million for livestock; $691 million total

- Grant: $64 million for crops; $513 for livestock; $577 million total

- Ford: $87 million for crops; $387 million for livestock; $474 million total

- Wichita: no specific crop and livestock totals available; $449 million total

- Seward: $82 million for crops; $280 million for livestock; $362 million total

The 2007 agricultural census information www.agcensus.usda.gov/Publications/2007/Full_Report/ is the most recent data available. The U.S. Census of Agriculture is taken every five years, and the 2012 data should be available in early 2014.

For more information about the Ogallala Aquifer depletion study led by Steward, a video is available on the K-State Research and Extension YouTube channel (<http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=sO6JRGQ6x4>).

Where back fat, marbling and money meet

It's a wonder any cattle feeder can judge the marbling inside the ribeye by guessing fat thickness just under the hide. It shouldn't work, but grid marketing of finished cattle is largely based on this acquired skill.

Robert Maddock, meat scientist at North Dakota State University, recently authored a white paper, "The relationship between subcutaneous fat and marbling," to help sort out the finer points.

On a carcass, the "sub-Q" is referred to as external fat, but most producers just call it back fat. Marbling is a more common term for intramuscular fat, the white flecks within meat that carry much of the flavor and determine taste.

It's a key issue in cattle feeding Maddock says, because putting on too much back fat means "lower carcass yields and higher costs of gain, whereas lack of marbling results in lower carcass value and generally lower consumer eating satisfaction."

The crux of the matter is these two manifestations of fat are only moderately related at best. Estimating fat cover is "not a good method of evaluating the marbling potential of finished cattle."

Still, it is possible to manage both or even enhance marbling while keeping back fat in check.

Historically, USDA quality grades declined for 16 years from 1990 to 2006 and the incidence of over-finished, yield grade (YG) 4 cattle increased for the last half of that period. Since 2006, both quality and yield grades have improved.

Only a tiny fraction of Prime carcasses were YG 1 in the 2011 National Beef Quality Audit, the same tiny fraction of Standard (no roll) carcasses that were YG 5. Most Prime and top Choice carcasses were YG 3.

Marbling growth is linear and "occurs at a relatively constant rate throughout finishing," the paper notes. "The high caloric intake of cattle in the feedlot allows the body to deposit marbling at the same time as it deposits subcutaneous fat."

That can start before cattle enter the feedlot, however, and the white paper points out:

- As long as the caloric and nutritional needs of growing cattle are met, energy in excess of requirements for growth will result in marbling development no matter the age of the cattle.

- When calories in excess of growth requirements are available, marbling will develop to the genetic potential of the cattle.

At some point, back fat and yield grade begin to increase faster than marbling growth. Data from the American Angus Association (see table) shows the greatest marbling growth occurs while 12th-rib fat is increasing from 0.3 to 0.5 inches, with little added marbling after 0.6 inches.

Tying in economic concerns, Maddock concludes, "Cattle should be fed until a point where excessive external fat and carcass weight result in discounts greater than any premium that can be obtained from higher marbling scores."

The details are in that white paper at www.cabpartners.com/news/research.php

Congressional report touts importance of agriculture exports

A report released in early October by the Joint Economic Committee of the U.S. Congress cites the importance of agriculture – and agricultural exports in particular – to the American economy.

The report, titled “The Economic Contribution of America’s Farmers and the Importance of Agricultural Exports,” notes that the United States is the world’s leading exporter of agricultural products, with a record $141.3 billion exported in 2012 and a $38.5 billion trade surplus for the year for the agriculture sector.

While those totals are impressive, the report also notes that although agriculture has accounted for less than 5 percent of the United States’ gross domestic product (GDP) from 2007 through 2011, agricultural products as a share of total exports hovered around 10 percent.

“Exports are critical to the success of U.S. agriculture, and population and income growth in developing countries ensures that this will continue to be the case in the decades to come,” the report states. “Taking action to facilitate exports would help to strengthen the agricultural sector and promote overall economic growth.”

The report goes on to say that agricultural exporters often encounter trade barriers.

“Despite some progress, average agricultural tariffs remain substantially higher than those imposed on other products,” the report noted. “Moreover, unpredictable and unscientific applications of sanitary and phytosanitary (SPS) measures can create a significant burden for exporters, in particular for producers and processors of meat products.”

According to the report, pressing for lower tariffs on agricultural products – as well as ensuring that SPS measures are not used inappropriately to keep U.S. goods out of overseas markets – would help exporters.

The report recommends actions that Congress can take to facilitate export opportunities for America’s farmers, ranchers and agricultural producers, including:

Enacting a long-term farm bill to provide a certainty for U.S. agriculture

Pushing for provisions that reduce barriers to agricultural exports

Promoting export opportunities for small and beginning farmers, ranchers and processors

The report cites the changing landscape for American agricultural exports over the past 20 years. Two decades ago, just 1 percent of U.S. agricultural export sales went to China. This total increased to 4 percent by 2002 but, by 2012, China was the top destination for U.S. agricultural products, purchasing more than $25 billion in products that accounted for more than 18 percent of total sales.

In 2012, the China/Hong Kong region was the No. 3 market for U.S. pork exports, purchasing 431,145 metric tons (950 million pounds) valued at $886.2 million. China also has rapidly grown into one of the leading global markets for beef, but the country has remained closed to U.S. beef exports since the 2003 BSE finding in the United States.

“This report reinforces the importance of exports for the American agricultural sector,” said Philip Seng, president and CEO of the U.S. Meat Export Federation. “It also documents two areas that are critical for the success of agricultural exports: the enactment of a long-term farm bill to provide support for agricultural exports and provisions that reduce barriers to those exports. Both are equally important for an area of the economy that produces a much-needed budget surplus and supports an estimated one million jobs across the country.”

In 2012, U.S. beef, pork and lamb exports amounted to more than 7.5 billion pounds of product valued at more than $11.8 billion. The export value per head processed amounted to $55.87 for pork and $216.73 for beef.

The champion market lamb at the Cloud County Fair was shown by Dalyn Zachgo, Clyde Roadrunners 4-H Club.

Kansas Soybean Commission re-elects officers

The Kansas Soybean Commission elected its 2013-2014 officers during its fall meeting, Aug. 20 in Manhattan.

Jerry Jeschke, Robinson, will lead the commission for a second term as chairman. The commissioners also re-elected the remaining officers: vice chairman, Ron Ohlde, Palmer; secretary, Kurt Maurath, Oakley; and treasurer, James Zwonitzer, Horton.

The other commissioners are Kent Romine, Great Bend; Dennis Gruenbacher, Andale; Robert Haselwood, Berryton; Mike Bellar, Howard; and Lance Rezac, Onaga.

Craig Gigstad, Valley Falls, who serves with Haselwood and Ohlde on the national United Soybean Board, is an ex officio, nonvoting counselor to the commission.

Yes, We Have It

Maybe it's a Kansas thing. We say things like: "Aw shucks, I'm just from Kansas" or "Oh, I'm only from a little town in the middle of nowhere" or "What is there to do in our little town? Nothing." As Kansans, it seems we are a self-effacing group. Unlike the stereotype of a Texan, for example, we are polite

Do We Have It?

By Ron Wilson, Poet Lariat

The folks were all excited, with a buzz all around: Visitors from Japan were coming to our small town. But then we got a call from the Japanese leadership. From the person who was coordinating the trip. He said, "Our Japanese have made an essential request." If you don't have it, we'll go somewhere else on our quest." We feared the worst, 'cause our little town doesn't have a lot. There's no four-star hotel or high-speed Internet we've got. There's no fancy restaurant or golf course within reach, And there's no sign of mountains or a nice sandy beach. So we braced ourselves for the very worst, And said, "What do they want?" - thinkin' our bubble would burst. He said, "It's something our Japanese never see in their places: It's a view of the horizon and the wide open spaces." Oh, the relief showed in all our smiles, As I said, "Why, out here, you can see for miles." What the Japanese wanted was everyday for us: The simple pleasure of life without congestedness. So the Japanese came and had a great time, Away from their big city congestion and grime. As they left, the horizon showed a beautiful sunset. They said it was a time they would never forget. Now it's quiet again in our little town. The pace of things has slowed back down. But when we think of what they wanted to see, I believe we see our home differently. We have wide open spaces and a horizon all around, Which the Japanese were thankful they had finally found. They came halfway around the world, they say, To see things we have around us each day. So instead of thinking what our towns have not, Let's celebrate the many assets we've got. It's good to see things as we travel and roam, But let's appreciate the things we have here at home. Happy Trails!

and we don't brag on ourselves.

I believe we have more going for us in our rural communities than we realize. We don't give our own rural communities enough credit. The following poem is based on a story I heard about a Kansas community which was going to have visitors from overseas. In our small Kansas towns, we seem to have an inferiority complex about not having mountains or oceans. But what this community discovered is that we do have things that people want: Simple pleasures such as wide open spaces, friendly people, and genuine western heritage.

Recently I had trailered my horse over to the south pasture to check cattle. All was well with the herd. As I came back, I made an extra stop on a whim. We were driving by the scenic outlook on Highway 177 south of Manhattan, where the awesome view looks over the Flint Hills and the Konza Prairie. Since he is a relatively younger horse, I thought maybe it would be a good place to stop and get him used to a different setting, so I pulled in.

I unloaded my horse from the trailer and mounted up. We rode around the driveway, over to the highway, and around the walkway through the grass just to give him some practice. When a few other random travelers stopped by, we started to generate some major attention. In various cars, there were families from Wichita and Hays plus a man from Miami, a lady from Chicago, a family from North Carolina and more.

"What a pretty horse!" "Hey, can I have your picture?" "How can he walk around on the hot pavement like that?" (I explained my horse was shod). Those were the types of comments I heard. My favorite was this one: "We're from Florida, and we don't get to look up and see a sight like that every day."

Well, what can I say? We're just lucky here. It's a Kansas thing.

Franklin County farmer provides leadership for U.S. soybean exports

John Wray, a soybean farmer from Ottawa, joined the U.S. Soybean Export Council's (USSEC's) 15-member board of directors during the organization's annual meeting Sept. 16 in Davenport, Iowa. He will represent trade, allied industry and state organizations. The Kansas Soybean Commission (KSC) and Kansas Soybean Association (KSA) endorsed him for the position.

Wray grew up on a farm near Ottawa, graduated from Ottawa High School and attended Kansas State University. He has been farming full time for 25 years and currently raises soybeans, corn, wheat, hay and cattle. He already was KSC's liaison to USSEC.

He was a member of the KSA Board of Directors for 11 years before agreeing to serve as one of Kansas' three representatives on the United Soybean Board (USB) from 2003 to 2012. He served on USB's international-market-development committee each of those years and chaired various subcommittees between 2006 and 2012.

Wray also has served on the World Initiative for Soy in Human Health advisory board. He has traveled extensively in Europe, Asia, Africa, Latin America and Australia.

"John brings a vast wealth of knowledge and experience to the USSEC board of directors," said Kenlon Johannes, KSA CEO and KSC administrator. "He is known for his no-nonsense approach to planning, efficiency and implementing programs."

Locally, Wray is a member of the Ottawa Chamber of Commerce agriculture committee, Franklin County Farm Bureau Association and Franklin County Agricultural Society. He has served on the Farm Bureau Young Farmers and Ranchers state and national committees.

Area ranches earn wins at Mill Creek Ranch Rodeo

Twenty ranch teams from across the region competed in the 26th annual Mill Creek Ranch Rodeo hosted by the Mill Creek Cowboy's Association October 5 in Alma. Teams of four cowboys and/or cowgirls competed for the fastest times in four events: cattle sorting, calf branding, cattle doctoring and trailer loading. Proper technique and animal welfare is also required; a judge can disqualify a team not following the event rules. Teams are awarded prizes for winning individual events and performance-based points are accumulated throughout the competition to determine the overall rodeo winners.

Winning the cattle sorting event was Keith Cattle

Company of Allen. A combined team of Rockin MK Ranch, Paxico, and Bar JL Ranch, Dwight, finished in second place. E Bar Ranch of Council Grove finished third.

Keith Cattle Company claimed first place in calf branding. A team from Robbins and Massey Ranches from Chase and Greenwood counties earned second place. Stuewe Ranch, Paxico, finished in third place.

The cattle doctoring event was also won by Keith Cattle Company. Lazy B Ranch, Ellsworth, won second place and JC Cattle Company from Junction City placed third.

The fastest team in trailer loading was Buchman

Ranch from Alta Vista. JC Cattle Company claimed second place and Buck Creek Ranch of Cottonwood Falls captured third place.

Claiming the overall title was Keith Cattle Company. Second place overall was awarded to Rezac Land and Livestock from Onaga. Earning the third place overall spot was JC Cattle Company.

Ranch teams placing in the overall competition are eligible for an invitation to the Flint Hills Beef Fest Ranch Rodeo held each August in Emporia.

Since 1986 the Mill Creek Cowboy's Association has provided equine and agricultural-based learning and recreational activities for families in Wabaunsee and surrounding counties. Membership is open to any family or interested individual for a one-time fee of $100. More information about the association can be found on the association's Facebook page, www.facebook.com /MillCreekCowboys, or by calling association president Earl Stuewe, Paxico.

Weather History

Oct. 15, 1954 - Hurricane Hazel struck the Carolina coastline. The hurricane demolished every pier along a 170 mile stretch from Myrtle Beach, S.C. to Cedar Island, N.C. and obliterated entire lines of beach homes. Hurricane Hazel also destroyed 1,500 homes as it moved inland.
