CATTLE AUCTION EVERY FRIDAY

STARTING 10:00 A.M. ON WEIGH COWS

FOLLOWED BY STOCKER FEEDERS — 11:00 A.M.

Our CONSIGNMENTS can now be viewed after 12 Noon on Mondays by going to www.grassandgrain.com & logging onto the online subscription

We had a lighter run of cattle on a cold day for our sale Friday, Dec. 9th. Weaned calves and feeder weight cattle were selling at mostly steady prices with several cattle carrying extra flesh. Unweaned heavy calves were selling lower according to quality and condition. Cull cows and bulls sold $2 to $3 lower.

The hay trade movement remained moderate on increased demand for grinding alfalfa and grass hay, prices steady. Although most of Kansas received some rain on recently, it was not enough to reverse the dry conditions, which now cover almost half the state. Drought conditions continue to increase with the abnormally dry (D0) category increasing to 52.54 pct, moderate drought (D1) increasing to 30.50 pct, and the severe drought (D2) category showing up in 17 southwestern counties, at 10.50 pct. The Kansas Forage and Grassland Council is having their annual conference on December 13 in Wichita. Visit their website at www.ksfgc.org, for more information and registration. If you have hay for sale, pasture to rent or need hay and/or grazing, use the services of the Hay and Pasture Exchange: www.kfb.org/commodities/haypasture/index.html

The longstanding tradition continues to provide a forum for cattlemen to consider innovative opportunities as the Red Angus Association of America's annual BrainTrust event will be held on Saturday, Jan. 7, at the DoubleTree Hotel in Denver, Colorado. The workshop will begin at 1:30 p.m. MST. Members unable to attend in person are invited to view the program live on DVAuction.com.

for cattlemen, specifically through commercial heifer applications.

Gary Fike, RAAA director of commercial marketing, will also be making the case for health protocols along with Dan Thompson, DVM, Kansas State University's School of Veterinary Medicine, and A.J. Tarpoff, DVM, Kansas State University Extension veterinarian. They will unveil the results of a recently completed survey of practicing large-animal veterinarians and their observations on the use of various health protocols in the field, and the economic implications of using some of the industry's best health- and overall beef-cattle-management practices.

The afternoon will conclude with a discussion panel featuring cattlemen who have implemented some of these innovative technologies into their beef businesses. They will share personal insight into the benefits of DNA in their commercial herds and how it has affected their selection process.

BrainTrust is free to attend and open to all interested individuals, regardless of breed interest.

Basket Inserts For Existing Round Bale Feeders.

The image consists of two black and white photographs. The top photograph shows a round bale feeder with a wire mesh basket insert installed inside. The feeder is situated in a field with several round hay bales in the background. The bottom photograph shows the same round bale feeder with the wire mesh basket insert placed next to it on the ground, demonstrating its size and shape. The basket is a shallow, circular wire mesh structure.

Dave and Cindy Judd inducted into Gelbvieh Hall of Fame

Dave and Cindy Judd of Pomona were inducted into the American Gelbvieh Association (AGA) Hall of Fame for 2017. The induction took place on Thursday, December 1, 2016, during the Cattlemen's Profit Roundup lunch at the 46th Annual AGA National Convention in Lincoln, Nebraska.

Dave and Cindy were joined by their son, Nick; daughter-in-law, Ginger; and grandchildren, Lily, Levi, and Lacy at the awards ceremony. Roger Gatz, Hiawatha, and past AGA Hall of Fame inductee, presented Dave and Cindy with the award.

The AGA Hall of Fame recognizes individuals for their lasting contribution to the growth and development of the Gelbvieh breed. That contribution is through the influence of cattle they have bred, breed promotion efforts, and leadership provided to the association.

Dave and Cindy Judd started Judd Ranch in 1981 with the goal of producing profitable and functional genetics for commercial cattlemen. Judd Ranch raises Gelbvieh, Red Angus and Balancer® cattle. Today, the operation is run by Dave and Cindy, along with their two sons and their families, Nick and Ginger and Brent and Ashley. This past October they held their 26th Annual Cow Power Female sale and they will hold their 39th annual bull sale this March.

Dave and Cindy Judd have been members of the American Gelbvieh Association since 1983. They have been very active throughout their time as AGA members, including Dave Judd serving on the AGA Board of Directors from 2004-2009.

In 2016, Judd Ranch was listed in Beef magazine's Seedstock 100 list, which is a listing of the top seedstock producers in the beef industry.

The American Gelbvieh Association is a progressive beef cattle breed association representing 1,000 members and approximately 40,000 cows assessed annually in a performance-oriented total herd reporting system.

Kansas State Board of Agriculture to meet December 16 in Manhattan

The Kansas Department of Agriculture's Board of Agriculture will meet at 10:00 a.m. on Friday, Dec. 16. This is a regularly scheduled board meeting.

The meeting will be held in the board room of the KDA office, 1320 Research Park Dr., Manhattan.

The meeting is open to the public. Individuals who have questions about the meeting should contact KDA assistant secretary Susan Metzger at Susan.Metzger@ks.gov for more information.

Persons who require special accommodations must make their needs known at least two days prior to the meeting.

Why beef quality grades are improving

Prices have eased, but a ten-year uptrend in beef quality from U.S. grain-fed cattle remains in place. That's partly because lower quality beef has sold at a widening discount to average quality, says a beef cattle specialist with the Certified Angus Beef® (CAB®) brand.

Paul Dykstra recently published the white paper, "Why quality grades are improving," which examines the trend, its causes and implications.

The last decade has been transformative, he says.

"Angus cattle have risen to dominate the U.S. beef supply chain because their owners and managers exploited the breed's ability to marble," Dykstra says. "That's independent of other economically important traits related to maternal and growth performance."

The market demanded more highly marbled beef, and producers responded through genetics, management and marketing strategies.

"Ten years ago, we had a shortage of high-quality product, with the weekly share of USDA Choice often dropping below 50%," he reviewed. "That led to market incentives, fueling the turnaround in grade. The 2015 average of 69.1% Choice was a 17.3-percentage-point improvement in annual grading since then."

Moreover, the highest quality, Prime had struggled to account for more than 3% of beef for many years but has effectively doubled its share. By late November 2016, Prime was averaging 6.7% of the U.S. fed-cattle mix, on top of 70.8% Choice.

"People may recall hearing about higher quality grades several decades ago, but in the 1970s and '80s many carcasses were not offered for USDA grading," Dykstra says. "Today's U.S. cattle herd is producing the largest amount of high-quality beef ever."

His overview includes the history and shifts in how quality grades are assigned, along with producer responses to environmental and economic signals, from drought and $7 corn to technological advances in feeding and genetic selection. Cargill unveils plans for $60M complex in Wichita (AP) – Agribusiness giant Cargill has unveiled plans for its new $60 million protein complex for its complex it plans to build at the site where the Wichita Eagle is now located.

The company released more details Thursday about its project, along with an artist's rendering. The four-story, 188,000-square-foot building accommodates about 800 employees. The proposal includes a 750-space parking garage.

The Wichita Eagle reported its building will be torn down, and the new complex is anticipated to open in 2018.

Wichita is home to Cargill's beef business and its turkey and cooked meat business, which includes deli meats. Its processed-protein services, such as its North American egg business and food distribution, also are located in Wichita.

Cargill announced plans in May to keep its protein operations in Wichita.

Emporia State collaborates in $1.05 million research of Kansas grassland management; Wichita State researchers share in the grant

A collaboration between two Kansas universities could benefit landowners across the state.

Biologists at both Emporia State University and Wichita State University are sharing $1.05 million in federal funding to study how grazing on grasslands will affect plants and wildlife.

Emporia State will receive about $680,000 of the funds for research directed by Dr. Bill Jensen, associate professor of biological sciences. The remaining funds will be used by Drs. Gregory Houseman and Mary Liz Jameson, both associate professors of biological sciences at Wichita State.

The project is significant in scope, Jensen explained.

“The research requires many boots in the field at the 108 study sites we’re targeting across the state of Kansas,” Jensen said.

All of the sites are grasslands that have been enrolled in the Conservation Reserve Program, or CRP, which is administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Under CRP, landowners are paid stipends by the USDA in exchange for restoring perennial grasslands from cropland. The program was designed to return erodible cropland to permanent grassland.

“Currently landowners are unable to graze cattle on these grasslands or at least not able to do so without a reduction in payment from USDA,” Jensen said. “That’s seen as a missing component of grassland management because grasslands in North America have evolved under the pressures of fire and grazing animals.”

“And grasslands that aren’t grazed by cattle or bison, especially these CRP grasslands are fairly homogenous in their habitat structure.”

The question for the team of researchers is whether introducing natural grazing to the grassland can benefit wildlife, particularly through improving the diversity and abundance of plants and insects, which will provide additional food for birds.

“My students and I are focusing on birds and their responses to management of CRP grasslands,” Jensen said.

The research will be done over time, with both graduate students having roles along with ESU undergraduate students working as field technicians.

“We need to recruit 13 students each summer for the next three summers,” Jensen said about his bird research. “This is probably the largest research project I’ve been involved with so far and maybe involved with ever in my career, so it’s a very exciting opportunity.”

Although much research will be done separately, students from both universities may find themselves working together at times.

Allison D. Garrett, ESU president, is excited that the research will benefit so many.

“This could potentially be helpful to landowners around the area depending on the outcome of the research,” Garrett said. “This research also provides an opportunity for faculty members to remain engaged and on the cutting edge, which is really helpful to them, not only in furthering their own research agendas but also in better preparing them to teach cutting-edge materials in the classroom as well.”

Finally, it benefits both current and future students.

“This grant will be incredibly helpful to us in that we’ll be able to provide some great internship opportunities and study opportunities for students, and it should be helpful to us in attracting really high-caliber biology students who want to be involved in this kind of research.”

Jensen agreed. “Those experiences as a field technician as an undergraduate can be vital to generating enthusiasm and filling out student resumes. I know the very reason I’m sitting here today is because I had that research experience as an undergraduate.”

“It’s a life-changing experience for students. In addition to classroom instruction, this is hands-on biology.”

Find-A-Vet tool helps U.S. pig farmers locate a veterinarian

Find-A-Vet is a timely tool created by GlobalVetLINK that assists U.S. pig farmers who are searching for a veterinarian for their animals. The Pork Checkoff, collaborating with the Ames, Iowa-based company, is making this online tool more accessible to all producers by linking it directly to the Pork Checkoff’s homepage at pork.org.

The online tool allows animal owners to quickly find a veterinarian in their area who offers services, such as the establishment of a veterinary-client-patient relationship (VCPR) and/or a Veterinary Feed Directive (VFD). Both a VCPR and a VFD will be necessary to use many in-feed antibiotics starting on Jan. 1, 2017. To use Find-A-Vet, producers will need to enter their ZIP code to search for the veterinarians closest to their location.

“This is just another example of how the Pork Checkoff is trying to help make the adjustment in antibiotic regulations easier for all producers,” said National Pork Board president Jan Archer, a pig farmer from Goldsboro, North Carolina. “While many of us already have a well-established working relationship with a veterinarian, we know some producers and youth exhibitors who live in places with few pigs may not have easy access to veterinary help. We hope this tool will help with that potential scenario.”

Dr. Dave Pyburn, senior vice-president of science and technology at the Pork Checkoff, says that having a valid VCPR is critical as we enter 2017 because that’s the only way you can legally obtain a VFD for in-feed antibiotics or a prescription for medications used via water, as required by FDA regulations.

“Exploring the information on the Antibiotics Resource Center on the pork.org website is a good way to learn more about specific issues and scenarios related to the new regulations,” Pyburn said. “With less than a month to go, the Checkoff is continuing to expand its materials and information to assist producers in this momentous change in how antibiotics are used and obtained. If everyone takes these steps now, we’ll be ready to go Jan. 1.”

Has wheat gluten changed over time? Quality project seeks to find out

By Hannah Schlapp,
Kansas Wheat
Communications Intern

For most celiacs, all they want to be able to do is have their wheat and eat it too. However, when people have celiac disease, any gluten they digest automatically damages their small intestine. That's why Dr. Chris Miller, a former faculty member at Kansas State University in Grain Science and Industry, now the director of wheat quality research at Heartland Plant Innovations, is trying to come up with a way for celiacs to be able to consume gluten without the repercussions their body has towards it.

While the long-term goal is to develop a wheat that would be safe for people with celiac disease to eat, this research is only the first step on that journey. Miller says, "We are characterizing wheat proteins important for both health and nutrition all the way to product quality, to give us a better understanding of celiac disease and protein reactivity."

The research began with studying different wheat varieties from the Kansas State University breeding program. They call it a diversity panel, which has a wide range of genetic diversity throughout the wheat plants looked at. That involved 50 Hard Red Winter wheat lines, which are made up of commercial varieties - ones that are currently grown, older varieties that were grown years ago but not planted much any more, and wild relatives of wheat, in addition to 50 Hard Red Spring wheat lines that do not come from Kansas but show wheat quality related to the breeding program.

"With these different varieties we can get a broad understanding of how genetics change over time, or if they have changed through our breeding selection,"

Dr. Chris Miller is trying to come up with a way for celiacs to be able to consume gluten without the repercussions their body has towards it. Miller said.

Miller and his colleagues started by characterizing the varieties' traits from the field all the way through their protein characterization, their genetic makeup (which involves the plants' genotypes), end-product testing (which examines the plants' milling and baking qualities), and health and nutrition attributes.

The research they have been conducting is into the third year, and they still don't have the answers they need. "It's a really slow, long process. Growing plants in the field is a slow process. Gathering the tissue, gathering the seed, getting the milling, getting all the product quality. It's just been incredibly slow," Miller said.

The researchers should be getting data in January regarding all the wheat plants tested, which will mean answers to many of the questions they have. At this point, they are not sure what those answers will be.

Aaron Harries, vice president of Research and Operations at Kansas Wheat, said this is discovery research. "We're not sure what we are going to find. The first stage is the exploratory stage and getting a base knowledge about wheat proteins. There's a lot of optimism, but a lot of uncertainty," Harries said. He said once they get the base knowledge completed, they will be able to learn more about the varieties.

Kansas wheat farmers are funding this research project through the Kansas Wheat Commission's two-cent wheat assessment. In terms of research in general, the funding is small. "We're getting about $130,000 per year, but we could easily use a million," Miller said. He stated that within the next year, they will have collected enough data and proof of concept that they'd be able to go out and apply for more funding opportunities.

After the preliminary research is complete, it may be necessary to collaborate with medical partners in order to reach the long-term goal: to help those with celiac disease be able to consume wheat products without any digestion problems.

"This is a study that's focused for the good of all human health. We're doing research here that they aren't doing anywhere else," Jordan Hildebrand, program assistant at Kansas Wheat, said. "The fact that Kansas wheat farmers took the initiative to fund the research showed their foresight and their desire to deliver a wholesome product for everyone who wants to have their bread and eat it too."

Dick Helms presents Andy LeDoux the prize check for their wins in the Gelbvieh Carcass Contest.

LeDoux Ranch wins big in Gelbvieh Carcass Contest

LeDoux Ranch of Agenda took home high honors including, top value steer and top carcass steer in the inaugural American Gelbvieh Foundation (AGF) Steer Challenge and Scale and Rale Sire-Identified Carcass Contest.

The AGF Steer Challenge was a competition amongst individual Gelbvieh and Balancer-influenced steers in which the judging criteria focused on average daily gain in the feedyard, carcass value and overall top value animal, which combined average daily gain and carcass value. The Steer Challenge gives an opportunity for participants to donate a steer to the AGF. All proceeds from the donation go toward research and development within the Gelbvieh breed. The AGF Sire-Identified Carcass Testing Contest judges individual steers, which were in a group of three or more animals from the same contemporary group, on these same qualities and also awarded a top-performing pen. In its first year, the AGF saw nine ranches participating with a total of 35 animals on feed.

LeDoux Ranch took home a total of $3,800 in prize winnings for their steers' performance in these contests. LeDoux's winning steer in the AGF Steer Challenge took home top carcass value and top value animal. This steer was sired by SGRI Jacked Up Z704. The same steer also took home top accolades in the Balancer® division of the Scale and Rale contest including second highest average daily gain at 4.27 pounds per day, top carcass value at $1,116 with a 1,060 pound hot carcass weight and a 15.3 in ribeye. This steer also took home top value Balancer animal with a value of $1,120, USDA Yield Grade 3.8 and a quality grade of USDA Choice when harvested in July 2016.

The AGF continues to help advance the Gelbvieh breed through its support of research and development. For this reason, the AGF launched its first ever Steer Challenge and Scale and Rail Sire-Identified Carcass Testing Contest. These two projects together provide the information and funds necessary to generate data sets to advance Gelbvieh carcass merit.

Dairy products getting bubbly boost from Kansas State University scientists

Kansas State University researchers are deploying small air bubbles invisible to the human eye in a quest to improve several popular dairy products and co-products.

Food scientist Jayendra Amamcharla said his research team is perfecting a process to incorporate air bubbles into condensed milk and yogurt to make the texture of these products more desirable for consumers.

"The consumer trend is toward high-protein yogurt products," said Amamcharla, an assistant professor of animal sciences and industry. "But one of the disadvantages of having higher proteins is that it increases the viscosity, or thickness, of the yogurt. It becomes so thick that you can eat it only with a spoon. We have incorporated air bubbles into a high-protein yogurt to reduce its viscosity so that it is drinkable."

The process developed by the Kansas State University team is patent pending, but Amamcharla says that when ready, it will be fairly simple to implement for milk processing facilities.

"From the manufacturers' side of this, it will improve the efficiency of processing milk, thus saving money for the plant," Amamcharla said.

"The other side is consumers," he said. "We are improving the acceptability of high-protein dairy products. There shouldn't be any differences in how these products taste, but there should be an improvement in how they feel on the tongue and in the mouth when consumers eat these products."

Amamcharla said the benefits of incorporating air bubbles will go beyond yogurt. The researchers are also finding positive results in other products and processes used in the dairy industry, including condensed milk, milk protein concentrates and whey protein concentrates.

Kansas State University's work has been funded by the Midwest Dairy Food Research Center and the National Dairy Council. Amamcharla credits Bingyi Li, master's student in food science, and Zhe "Dylan" Liu, postdoctoral researcher in animal sciences and industry, as being especially critical in the progress the team has made so far.

Lost Trails

Poking around in the woods or mountains can be a lot of fun. Poking around those places on horseback is even more fun. Looking over new country on your best horse and maybe even having a pack horse along carrying camping gear is satisfying to any horseman's soul. Sometimes I like to get as far away from civilization as possible. My best memories are packing into the mountains and setting up camp for a weekend of fly fishing on the high mountain lakes. Spending time poring over topographical maps looking for new places in the mountains is never boring. You can wonder all you want what particular places look like but you'll never know until you saddle up and head for the hills to see for yourself. Sometimes it is hard to decipher the maps. Finding some of those places you've picked out to explore can be a challenge. More than once, I've rode for miles looking for a particular place. Those times almost always end up spending the night in a siwash camp in a place I didn't want to be. Usually you end up in a dry camp with lots of firewood but a long way from the place you wanted to camp. That doesn't make for a happy camper and your horses aren't pleased with the situation either since they have to spend the night on a picket line instead of hobbled in a nice grassy meadow.

You eventually find the place you were looking for but you've wasted a day searching for that interesting spot you thought you could ride to in a few hours. Trails are easy to lose in the deep woods and crossing over the wrong ridge or riding down a dead end canyon can take you miles from your target. When you do find the place, you'll be able to ride back to the spot with no problem once you figure out the right trails.

There is an answer to finding the right trails leading into those places way back in the woods or high in the mountains.

A pocket GPS can make life a lot easier for the back-country horseman. It can show you the way and keep you on the right trail whether you're coming or going in daylight or the blackness of night. They're amazing little devices. I don't know how they pack all those maps and information in such a small, compact gadget. To me, they are nothing less than a miracle.

A pocket GPS can keep you out of trouble and point the way home and never lose the trail. What's more, they can steer you right to the spot you want to camp and save you lost time hunting and pecking around the woods wondering how to get there.

The best part is that the units are very affordable. You can acquire one of these super navigation units for under $200 and even name brand units sell for a little over $100. The best units have a SD card slot that you can pre-load with chips that have a topo map of the area you intend to travel. With one of the chips installed, your position is projected right on the screen pinpointing your location right over the topo map.

Knowing exactly where you are in the woods lends a sense of security and takes the worry out of finding the right trail. You'll know exactly where your destination is and how to get there. It can also show the best way to go around obstacles like steep draws, dead-end canyons or find the best places to cross rivers and creeks.

The hand-held pocket units are probably more suited for horsemen because of their compact size. They easily fit in your pocket or saddle bags when not in use. They are all portable and most models are waterproof and durable with good antennas that will receive the satellite signals when in heavy wooded areas or hilly regions.

Most units use 2 AA batteries and can operate from 15 to 24 hours. It's a good idea to take along a couple extra sets of batteries for long trips so you don't suffer the dilemma of dead batteries when you need the unit at a critical time. The small size of the pocket GPS and extra batteries make packing it a pleasure.

If you spend a little time going through catalogs and looking for sales at some of the outdoor stores, you may be able to find a GPS unit that will work for you at less than retail price. Try it; you'll be glad you did.

Your horses and pack horses will be tickled you didn't leave home without one. You'll save them a lot of miles by riding right to your intended destination. They'll appreciate grazing in that grassy meadow rather than spending the night on a picket line.

Schwieterman Market Commentary

By Bret Crotts

The December supply and demand report had absolutely no changes for the U.S. corn, wheat, or soybean table, so once again the December report was the most boring of the year. Next on the horizon is the “final” report in January and the quarterly stocks report that is at the same time. Those that were looking for some changes from USDA this go-round will get their wish in January. Most likely when that report rolls around we will see higher export estimates for the corn and soybeans and possibly higher production estimates as well. In the mean time we will have couple of holidays and some thin, choppy trade.

On the charts, the corn market is still trading in a broad range and there is no indication that we are going to break out of the range any time soon. Demand is great, which is supportive, but supplies are huge, which is negative. Thus we are in a bit of equilibrium until we see a shift in the fundamentals.

The wheat posted a good enough close last Friday that some short-term technical indicators generated buy signals. We have seen decent demand and the drought monitor is getting worse, so there isn't any fresh incentive to push the market lower. After all, the Kansas City contracts did make new contract lows this week, so what's the rush to push the market even lower? There is a good chance we see new lows later in the winter, but for now this wave of selling has run its course and we should be able to get a bounce back towards the 50-day moving average.

The outlook for the soybeans is just about the opposite of that of the wheat. The bean market has been trending higher for the most part and the failure to make a new high last week suggests the market has run out of momentum and is in need of a correction. Demand is tremendous, so that isn't an issue at all, but money flow is and with the funds carrying a large, profitable long position, there is plenty of incentive to take profit before the end of the year. The March contract should pull back to the $10.10 area and then start to work higher again. The bullish funda-mentals of the vegetable oil market are still supportive and the crush margins in China will keep them buying.

The cattle market ran out of steam last week. For the most part the futures were never able to fully recover from the break late the week before, which set a negative tone for the cash market. Cash cattle ended up trading at $110 in Kansas, which was a sharp break from the week prior. Now that this correction is out of the way, I suspect we will resume the uptrend in the market and we will see a new high for the move in the futures before Christmas.
