Ag Outlook Forum set for September 28

The Agricultural Business Council of Kansas City and Agri-Pulse Communications announce plans to present an Ag Outlook Forum on September 28th in Kansas City.

This year has already proven to be very challenging for farmers, agribusiness and rural America. With a new administration, a new Congress, and debate already starting on the 2018 Farm Bill, this is a great time to connect with top-notch leaders across agriculture and rural America, including:

Kansas City Federal Reserve president Esther George Kansas governor Sam Brownback

Missouri governor Eric Greitens (invited)

John Deere senior vice president John Lagemann

Kansas City Southern president & CEO Patrick Ottensmeyer

"Kansas City has been growing as a regional hub for hundreds of agribusinesses and this is a great way to showcase some of our best and brightest," says Cliff Becker, chairman, Agricultural Business Council of Kansas City. "The event will build on the very successful inaugural session the group held in 2016."

Becker, a senior executive with Farm Journal Media, said the Council is excited to partner on the 2017 version with Agri-Pulse Communications, a media company known as an industry leader in agricultural policy coverage and analysis.

"We are pleased to partner with the Agricultural Business Council of Kansas City to provide participants with a CEO-level perspective on the issues, opportunities, and challenges facing the agriculture industry," said Sara Wyant, president, Agri-Pulse Communications.

The Ag Outlook Forum will be held at the offices of Stinson Leonard Street in downtown Kansas City, 1201 Walnut. The program will begin at 1:30 p.m. and will conclude with a networking reception at 5:00 p.m. Early-bird registration is $95 for Agricultural Business Council members and $125 for non-members.

Registration is now open at: www.agbizkc.com/agoutlookforum

Becker said there are a limited number of seats and expects the event to be a sell-out, urging those interested in attending to register early. General event information is available at www.agbizkc.com or by calling (816) 912-

YSA class gets firsthand look at agribusiness, retail beef industry

Beef producers from across the state participating in this year's KLA Young Stockmen's Academy (YSA) gathered in the Kansas City area May 8-10. The class of 20 spent three days learning more about the agribusiness and retail beef industries.

Merck Animal Health, the exclusive sponsor of the program, hosted the group at its office in DeSoto, Merck staff gave attendees an overview of the animal health industry, provided a tour of the company's research farm and led a discussion on how to connect with others based on various personality types to create strong and effective relationships.

To gain a better understanding of the link between the processing plant and the consumer's plate, the group toured Kansas City Steak Company and SYSCO Food Services. Both companies distribute high-end beef cuts to restaurants across the U.S. Kansas City Steak Company also has a mail-order business and sells beef products on QVC, a home shopping channel. The class visited Bichelmeyer Meats, Whole Foods Market and Sprouts Farmers Market to get a firsthand look at how beef is sold in the meat case.

While distributing top sirloin samples at two HyVee grocery store locations, YSA members visited beef is produced. The young ranchers answered questions about animal health, beef nutrition and proper cooking methods.

In addition, YSA members heard how Bartlett and Company uses strict risk management practices when buying and selling cattle and grain.

Members of the 2017 YSA class are Kaid Baumann, Kensington; Heath Bergkamp, Arlington; Colby Brownrigg, Welda; Joseph Hubbard, Houston Lake, Mo.; Blake Jones, Waverly; Kayla Josefiak, Burdett; Cassie Kniebel. Livestock industry calls for swift action on EPA regulations

The National Cattlemen's Beef Association and the Public Lands Council recently filed comments to the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) calling for action on burdensome regulations put forth by the previous administration.

The groups said that the regulations, "inhibit job creation, are ineffective, are unnecessary or impose costs that exceed the environmental benefits. Often these regulations impose federal requirements on cattle producers that discourage innovation and impose rigid requirements that do not work on cattle operations and, moreover, defy common sense."

Specifically, the groups called on the agency to replace the Waters of the United State rule with a rule that will clarify federal jurisdiction over water without overreaching. The associations also called for a repeal of the Mandatory Reporting of Greenhouse Gases (GHG) rule for manure management.

"According to the EPA, beef cattle production is only responsible for 1.9 percent of the total U.S. GHG emissions," said Ben Weinheimer, TCFA vice president. "The science speaks for itself. Cattle are a very small contributor of GHG emissions, most of which are generated from natural digestion of forages and feed. Mandatory reporting of GHGs places unnecessary burdens on producers. It is an added cost with negligible environmental bene-

Dedication planned for Farmers Cooperative's new grain shuttle facility

The Farmers Cooperative will hold a dedication for their new Train Shuttle Facility on Tuesday, June 13th near Frankfort. An Open House will be held from 10:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m. with tours, prizes, and giveaways. A brief ribbon-cutting ceremony will start at 10:30 and a meal will be provided. The new facility is located at 2084 Tumbleweed Road just slightly north and west of Frankfort. All producers are encouraged to attend the event.

The Farmers Cooperative train loading shuttle is an advanced, automated grain handling system. This 30-million-dollar facility has a total storage capacity of 4.1 million bushels. Farmers Cooperative plans to handle at least eight to ten million bushels each year from this facility. The shuttle loader contains over 8000 feet of track in a loop system so the train unit is never broken.

Unit trains with 110 cars can easily be loaded in less entities and it creates jobs. Dale Hayek, Farmers Coopthan 15 hours. Producers delivering grain to the facility will find a state-of-the-art scale system that contains both inbound and outbound scales so driver never leaves the cab. Unloading by truck should be relatively quick with the 3 unloading pits that have a 49,000 bushel-per-hour elevation capacity.

According to Dennis Kenning, sales & marketing manager, "The facility was constructed to better serve our Kansas and southern Nebraska producers. Our company has always believed in "Investing in Our Owners' Success," and this is just one of the many ways we reinvest to better serve our patrons. We know that Frankfort is a great place to open a facility like this."

Taxes from the investment help support government

erative grain manager explains that "The facility will bring new grain markets to northeast Kansas. This will save producer's freight expense while providing higher cash prices for grain. Economically the facility will create more activity for Frankfort and the surrounding area. This is a long-term investment for the Farmers Co-

The Farmers Cooperative includes major locations in Beattie, Frankfort, Summerfield, Marietta, Waterville, Blue Rapids, Hanover, and Herkimer. The company headquarters is located in Dorchester, Nebraska.

Kenning also went on to say, "We hope all producers will come out and see the facility. The event will be held rain or shine."

Butler County farmer thriving after adding high tunnels to business

Todd Griggs admits that he was skeptical the first time that Butler County extension agent Larry Crouse brought up the idea of building a greenhouse to grow tomatoes and support his family.

Griggs, owner of Griggs Bros. Farms, was doing fairly well growing field tomatoes and a few other crops south of Augusta. And he figured that dealing with the weather and the various pests was just part of doing business.

But then fate came knocking at his door.

"I was offered a high tunnel (greenhouse) for sale, so I purchased it and the next year we produced in it," Griggs said, "and I corrected my thinking."

That was in 2010, and Griggs had been getting about four pounds of marketable fruit from his field tomatoes. In the first year of growing in the high tunnel - also called a hoop house fruit per plant.

"That changed me," Griggs said. "Here I was fighting drought outside and trying to get four pounds per plant of something that was marketable. We have high quality standards and I just was not getting that out in the field.

"Once I saw what the yield was coming out of

- he harvested 18 pounds of that first house, I changed my thinking and we headed down that road and purchased our next houses.'

> Griggs is now growing in seven high tunnels, with five more being built. The family continues to grow produce in fields south of town.

> "I am not quite big enough to call a truck to back up to my door and load up a full load of tomatoes on any given day," Griggs said. "But we are at five farmers' markets that we've been doing for a couple years and that's quite a bit. We have a roadside stand. We do a little bit of pick-vour-own, I furnish some roadside vendors with their stuff, and then other farmers' market vendors.

"What I'd like to do and where we're headed is to be able to cut back on those farmer's markets that we're headed to and get that contract to where we are actually growing for a distributorship."

Griggs' success is indicative of the role that county Extension agents can play in helping to advance local food systems.

"The great thing for me in working with Todd is his willingness to learn, his willingness to implement what needs to be done and having the wherewithal to do that," said Crouse, who has been an Extension agent in Oklahoma and Kansas for 27 years.

"Now that he is successful and has this business going, it's so much easier for me to talk with other people and show other people what can be done. We can talk high tunnels in the classroom all day long, but when you can bring somebody out to an operation like this and tell them six years ago none of this existed and this is what can be done, that opens a lot of eyes.'

Crouse routinely brings Extension agents, Master Gardeners and others to Griggs Bros. Farms to learn more about growing produce in high tunnels.

"He has no secrets," Crouse said of Griggs. "He sees the further development of vegetable growing in this area as a win-win for everybody. The more people we can get doing this, the better market atmosphere we can create for the entire Griggs does his part to boost the local economy by hiring local high school students, and others for summer work. He's also working to expand production and talking with area groups about developing new markets through a food hub.

"I personally see that some kind of distribution network down here would be good for the business," Griggs said. "Local food is still pretty hot and I don't see it dying down anytime

This year, Griggs said he picked his first tomatoes on April 16 - "the earliest I have ever picked tomatoes." Because of the high tunnels, he was able to pick tomatoes last year until just before Thanksgiving.

That extended growing season "keeps the markets open longer with more viable produce," Crouse said. "And when markets stay open longer with more viable produce, then more people visit them for longer periods of time. That's just keeping more Kansas dollars in Kansas."

"There's plenty of room for everybody," Griggs said. "The more vegetable production we get in this area, the better this area is going to be for everyone, including myself. If there were some other growers that would get started, it would only benefit all of us."

Griggs also doesn't mind admitting he's now the guy trying to coax others into growing in high tunnels.

"I do feel that if it wasn't for K-State Research and Extension, I probably would not have headed down the road that I did, developing my high tunnels and my greenhouse business," he said. "I'd still be out there in the field wondering how come it's raining all the time and I have bad product.

"It's a great benefit to the development of my business, and how we've been able to do what we've done in the short amount of time that we've been able to do

Current and Future Land Values in Kansas

By Katelyn Brockus, River Valley Extension District

Current and future land values has become a topic of discussion amongst farmers, ranchers, lenders, and other types of investors. As Extension begins to get questions on what land is worth right now, as well as predictions for land values in the future, the data presented in this article could be helpful in navigating a struggling farm economy. As in previous articles that have been published, Dr. Mykel Taylor, K-State Research and Extension economist, will be referenced for her work and what she has done to prepare Extension professionals to better answer these tough questions. Will it be another repeat of the 1980s farm crisis? How will the economy respond? How quick will land values fall and how long will it take for them to rise again? What data should farmers and ranchers be paying attention to in order to stay ahead of the tough times that they are currently withstanding and appear to be facing for the next few years?

Let's start out with a bit of a background on where we have been in the past for farmland. The data presented first in this article is taken from Kansas Farm Management Association (KFMA). From around 1999 to 2007, farmers were barely breaking even on wheat, corn, beans, and milo. In 2008 commodity prices started to improve and continued with that trend until 2013. Profitability then took a downward turn in 2014 and 2015 where farmers went from approximately $50 an acre of profitability to a loss of approximately $50 an acre. When analyzing 2016, farmers had great yields but not great commodity prices. However, the positive that came from the year 2016 was that yields were able to help stabilize the downturn in commodity prices. One topic of concern for the upcoming years is having decreased yields along with lower commodity prices.

When looking at the whole farm and net income per operator, 2015 shows a net farm income of $4,500 for dryland crop farmers. This is a drastic decrease in net farm income when compared to a profitability of approximately $90,000 in 2014. When looking at catin net ranch income, 2014 was a record high of a little over $180,000 in profitability. In 2015, that profitability declined to approximately $75,000 in net ranch income, which is a 41% decline. The year 2016 will probably be even lower profitability yet for both the crop and cattle

When looking at Kansas Ag Statistics survey, 2016 cropland values averaged $2,050 an acre which is down by 7% from the previous year. This average includes both irrigated and non-irrigated land. However, when looking at Kansas as a whole, it is mostly dryland so this number is more of a representation of dryland than it is irrigated. Pasture land values in 2016 averaged $1,290 an acre with a decrease of 7% from the previous year. When analyzing the land market in previous years, it began to increase in 2008 and peaked in 2014 for cropland values for dryland. Since 2014, dryland values have decreased by 10%. Pasture land values peaked in 2015 and decreased by 8% from 2015 to 2016.

The data presented from the Kansas Ag Statistics is a survey. One of the challenges with surveys is that an opinion or a best-guess type of scenario can be formed. It is also not a market based estimate, and it only presents the average and not the spread. The next data that will be shared is based off of market transaction data from the Property Valuation Department (PVD) in Topeka. This is sales data from 2014 to 2016 and must meet certain criteria.

The average parcel size in Kansas was 156 acres with around 4.5% having CRP contracts and the average sales per county was approximately 25. The total sales transactions from 2014 to 2016 was 6,845. It is also important to note that there was a 18% drop in sales transactions from 2015 to 2016. No sale options are not counted within these statistics.

When looking at cropland pasture sales according to PVD, the average was $3.027 collectively. This was a 10.4% decline from 2015. Both the USDA and sales market data are comparable with both numbers close to

According to PVD numbers, non-irrigated land showed a decrease of 17% from 2015 to 2016. When comparing the USDA land value numbers to the PVD numbers, then one can see that USDA land values are about 30% lower than PVD sales. While there might be a slight discrepancy amongst the numbers, the trend is still the same on dryland acres. Pasture land was comparable with both USDA and PVD numbers showing a decrease of 7 and 8% respectively from 2015

Now that we have looked at where we have been in the past, let's see where things are projected to go into the future. It has been quite apparent that we have had three years in a row of poor returns to farming and that 2016 is looking to continue that trend. When these numbers are put into a statistical model, the results portray somewhere around a 4.6% capitalization rate. A capitalization rate is the rate of return on an investment property based on the income that the property is expected to generate. In other words, this is the rate that is used to estimate the investors potential return on their investment. According to Dr. Mykel Taylor, if we see a 4.6% capitalization rate partnered with approximately $1,000 projected long run Kansas land price, then the projected net farm income per acre would be $46. When comparing this to previous years, it is about a 50% decline from the year 2014. When looking at the long run and the projected capitalization rate, the values have only decreased by 17% thus far. If this capitalization rate turns out to be accurate, then we are not done with the decline in land values. This means that farmers could potentially still be faced with a 20-30% additional decrease in land values for the state of Kansas. It is important to note that these are only projections, and it is unknown as to how the markets could change and affect the outcomes of these numbers.

While this information has similar qualities as to what farmers went through in the 1980s, there is more information available to assist farmers and ranchers through trying times. Extension professionals around the state have been

Kansas Forest Service announces Walnut Council field day

The Kansas chapter of the Walnut Council will host its annual field day June 2 at the Overland Park Arboretum, a botanical garden that features 13 gardens and more than 1,700 plant species.

The program begins at 8:30 a.m. and continues through the afternoon. The registration fee is $15, which includes morning refreshments, lunch and other activities. The arboretum is located at 8909 W. 179th Street in Overland Park.

The Walnut Council is a non-profit international organization that represents more than 1,000 woodland owners, foresters, ecologists, scientists, and wood-producing industries. Their mission focuses on transferring the best science and research available in the growth and care of black walnut, other fine quality trees, and related natural resources that provide wildlife habitat, recreation, water quality and forest products.

The 300-acre arboretum and botanical garden offers miles of hiking trails that traverse rocky bluffs and bottomland paths along Wolf Creek. The native woodlands and prairie provide a variety of wildlife viewing opportunities.

This event will include:

· Woodland wildflower and tree identification hikes
by experts from the Kansas

Native Plant Society;
Sawmill demonstrations from Kansas Forest Service and private mill operators;

· Wildlife management and deer damage control from K-State Research and Extension;

· Sessions on improving woodland health and productivity;

Diagnosing and controlling tree health issues;

· Streambank and water quality management.

Participants will be divided into groups of 15 to 20 people, and each group will have a designated leader who will guide participants to session locations.

More information and registration is available online at www.kansasforests. org/events/news_docs/calendar/WCFD2017.pdf

Marshall meets with ag secretary and U.S. trade representative

Congressman Roger Marshall, M.D., issued the following statement following a House Ag Committee roundtable with USDA Secretary Sonny Perdue, and U.S. Trade Representative Robert Lighthizer:

Representative Robert Lighthizer:
Today's committee roundtable was a great opportunity to hear directly from the administration about their trade policy priorities, including enforcement of existing agreements.

In addition to enforcement, it is critical to Kansas farmers and ranchers that the administration begins to fulfill it's promise of bilateral market access in key countries like Japan.

Expanding trade opportunities is key to reviving Kansas' rural economy. As Secretary Perdue said, "A healthy U.S. economy is dependent upon agriculture. A healthy ag economy is dependent upon trade."

These two individuals are key players in crafting that trade policy. That is why it was an honor to have them in front of the House Ag Committee.

Tell them you saw it in Grass & Grain! Grass & Grain, May 30, 2017 Kansas net farm income rebounds somewhat, but ag economy continues to slump

Kansas average net farm income rebounded somewhat last year to $43,161 from a dismal stretch the previous year when income fell to $6,744 - the lowest in 30 years. The improvement in 2016 was supported by higher crop yields and a decrease in crop production input and machinery costs, according to data from the Kansas Farm Management Association's annual summary of member farms.

Not all Kansas farms are KFMA members, but the annual summary can be helpful in identifying trends in agriculture across the state. said Kevin Herbel, KFMA executive director. The 2016 summary information is based on member data from 1,024 farms, including a range of operations such as dryland crop production to irrigated crop production to various types of livestock production businesses.

Prices for most commodities continued at subpar levels in 2016, Herbel said, but above-average crop yields per acre in many areas helped lead to greater value of farm production. That, coupled with a decrease in overall crop production and machinery expenses, contributed to the rise in net income.

The KFMA data showed that crop value per acre was up 5.4 percent at $330.66 in 2016, while crop production costs per acre were down 6 percent at $246.99, and machinery costs per acre were down 8.9 percent at $86.21.

"After a number of years of annual increases, the machinery investment per crop acre was down 4.2 percent to $255.21 as KFMA members purchased and updated less machinery and equipment during the year," Herbel said.

Overall farm debt levels decreased slightly on KFMA farms in 2016. This occurred as current liabilities decreased while intermediate and long-term debts increased, he said, adding, "This would appear to reflect some restructuring of debt to be occurring among the KFMA farms following a period of substantial increases to current liabilities in recent years."

As is the case every year, the average net farm income varied sharply from one region of the state to another. In 2016, southeast Kansas farms fared better than in other areas, with average net farm income of $109,344. Northeast Kansas income averaged $48,197, southwest at $39,615 and north-central at $34,205. Net income for farms in northwest Kansas averaged $389 and south-central farms averaged a loss of $5,352.

Even with outcomes in 2016 better than a year earlier overall, the agricultural economy is still in a slump, Herbel said, adding that it is important to note that 35 percent of the KFMA farms recorded a net loss for the year, with much variation in revenue and cost structure between farms.

"As we continue in this economic downturn in the agriculture sector, it continues to be important for every producer and farm adviser to know and understand the financial performance on each operation," Herbel added. "Careful planning, good communication, and management decisions based on a quality set of records, will be essential for each operation as they chart the path for 2017 and the years ahead." Six KFMA economists participated in a roundtable discussion of the new report on the May 24 edition of the "Agriculture Today" radio program, produced by K-State Research and Extension. That discussion is available online in three

Senate passes bipartisan, bicameral legislation to address agro-terrorism threats to nation's food supply The U.S. Senate recent. Young (R-IA), Donald Payne, farmers and ranchers face. food supply could put count. paredness and emergency of layer hens, turkey approved legislation to address the threat of agro-terrorism and ensure the safety of the U.S. food supply. The legislation was introduced by U.S. Sens. Pat. Roberts (R-KS), chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, and Claire McCaskill (D-MO), Ranking Member of the Senate Homeland Security Committee, in the Senate and U.S. Reps. David Jr. (D-NJ), and Dan Donovan (R-NY) in the House.

"An attack on our nation's food supply would cause irreparable damage," said Roberts. "This legislation reiterates the important and necessary role of the DHS in the agro-terrorism space. As former Chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, I understand the unique threat our

As the backbone of the U.S. economy, the spread of any deadly pathogen among our livestock and plant population would be devastating. I look forward to continuing to work with DHS and USDA, which play equally important roles, in protecting our homeland's food supply."

"A terrorist attack on our agricultural industry or less lives at risk and result in huge economic losses for our state's farmers and ranchers," said McCaskill, the top-ranking Democrat on the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Committee. "Missourians rightly expect me to work with my Republican colleagues and President Trump on issues of national security and I'm going to continue to do that no matter what partisans on both sides might say."

"Our nation's enemies are intent on attacking us by exploiting our resources and vulnerabilities, including our food supply," said Donovan, Chairman of the House Subcommittee on Emergency Preparedness, Response, and Communications. "Threats to U.S food, agriculture, and livestock industries could devastate our food system, impacting millions of Americans, as well as our economy. This bill is essential to enhancing agro-terrorism preresponse measures, and I'm proud to have worked with my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to get it passed. I look forward to having President Trump sign this important legislation into law."

"I am pleased to reintroduce legislation that will protect our nation's food system from terrorist threats." said Payne, Jr., Ranking Member of the House Subcommittee on Emergency Preparedness, Response, and Communications. "Any attack on our food supply could have devastating consequences on our economy and our communities, which is why we must take immediate action to mitigate against potential threats. Our bill makes sure that we address critical security vulnerabilities before they can be exploited."

"I introduced this legislation following the avian influenza outbreak of 2015 which wiped out millions of layer hens, turkeys, and backyard flocks in Iowa," said Young. "Response efforts revealed problematic breaks in the federal government's ability to communicate with the people and react quickly to large-scale animal disease outbreaks. This disaster also raised concerns among farmers and producers about whether our nation would be able to quickly and effectively share information and respond to agro-terrorism threats and bio-attacks, ultimately an attack against the safety and reliability of food supplies consumers rely on. I am pleased both the U.S. House of Representatives and U.S. Senate have taken the important steps towards advancing these common sense measures critical to our national security and food safety, for our children and families in Iowa and across the nation."

After House consideration, the bill then goes to the president's desk for signature.

New wildfire relief PSA features actor Eric Stonestreet

Kansas farmers and ranchers are still recovering and rebuilding after the state's largest wildfire burned more than 651,000 acres causing more than $38 million in losses in

'This fire was devastating," Matt Teagarden, Kansas Livestock Association CEO, says. "It's going to take millions of dollars and a number of years to rebuild."

Kansas Farm Bureau (KFB). Kansas Livestock Association (KLA) and New Boston Creative Group have partnered together in developing a new PSA featuring TV actor and comedian Eric Stonestreet. The PSA encourages people to donate to a fund established by KLA that will help those impacted by the fire rebuild.

"As many people know, Eric was born in Kansas City and is a huge supporter of our great state," Meagan Cramer, director of communications at KFB, says. "When we asked him to help with the project, he was kind enough to say yes. We are grateful to Eric for helping us."

The ladybug – a friend to farmers

By Jeri Geren, Diversified Ag and Natural Resources,

Wildcat Extension District There seem to be lots of those red and black spotted insects active this year. From alfalfa fields to wheat crops, the landscape seems to be teeming with lady bugs. Most farmers and ranchers know lady beetles are a beneficial insect, but many may be unaware of all that they do.

The most abundant lady beetle, or ladybug, species in Kansas field crops is the convergent lady beetle, Hippodamia convergens. It is a native species. This lady beetle is recognizable by the two convergent white lines on the black portion of the body immediately behind the head. Aphids are the preferred food, although adults may supplement their diet with other prey items. Overwintered adults produce one generation in early spring that is typically completed around the time wheat is harvested, leading to the mass exodus of large numbers of beetles from maturing wheat fields. As fall brings cooler weather, females lay their bright yellow or orange eggs in clusters near aphid colonies to begin the next generation. They will remain dormant through winter months until they are awakened by the warm temperatures of spring. Another common species is the twelve-spotted or pink lady beetle, Coleomegilla maculata. The adults are pink with six black spots on each wing cover. Aphids are also the preferred food of this species, but a very wide range of insect prey may be consumed. The larvae of this species are unique among lady beetles in their ability to complete development on an exclusive diet of pollen. Pollen is also attractive to adults and many can be found in corn fields at tasseling. They also like to feed on the eggs and small larvae of many moth species that are abundant in corn, including corn borers. This species is often abundant in proximity to water sources such as rivers and lakes. It hibernates in aggregations during winter months but, unlike the convergent lady beetle, probably continues to reproduce throughout summer months, typically producing three or four generations per year.

A species becoming increasingly common in the Midwest with the advent of soybean aphid is the multicolored Asian lady beetle, Harmonia axyridis. Adults are highly variable in coloration (pale orange to red) and spotting patterns (males often have none). The key to identifying this species is the prominent black 'W' on the part of the body behind the head. This invasive species is a voracious predator of aphids and many other insects, including the larvae of alfalfa weevil. Unfortunately, it will also feed on the eggs and larvae of many other lady beetles and has been associated with the declining abundance of a number of native species. This is a fact that has tainted its reputation as an otherwise effective biological control agent in many types of agricultural production. Another habit contributing to the potential pest status of this beetle is its tendency for entering houses in fall

and winter, often forming large aggregations that can be very distressing to homeowners.

Lady beetles are a welcomed insect in crop fields across Kansas. They usually feed on aphids and a variety of other soft-bodied insects. Some will also feed on mites and the eggs and larvae of moths and beetles. Understanding all that they do to protect agricultural crops makes them easy to appreciate. They are truly a remarkable insect. Upon the next opportunity, really take the time to admire the ladybug.

Tractor Supply's Spring Paper Clover raises $825,000 for 4-H youth

Approximately 14,000 4-H youth from across the country will have countless opportunities to learn valuable life skills this summer, thanks to more than $825,000 donated by Tractor Supply Company customers earlier this year.

Between Apr. 26 and May 7, Tractor Supply stores across the country hosted a Paper Clover fundraiser to send tens of thousands of 4-H youth to county-level development programs, camps and leadership conferences. Awarded as scholarships, the money will enable individual 4-H members to learn everything from science and technology to fishing and horseback riding.

"The value of our partnership with National 4-H Council is never more clear than during the Paper Clover Campaign," said Christi Korzekwa, senior vice president of marketing at Tractor Supply Company. "Our dedicated team members and loyal customers continue to show outstanding support for 4-H programs that teach children life skills in science, healthy living and citizenship empowering them to thrive today and tomor-

2017 marks the eighth consecutive year of the semi-annual Paper Clover Campaign. The partnership between Tractor Supply and National 4-H Council has generated more than $11 million in essential funding over its history, due in large part to the commitment of 4-H groups. This year, in-including greenhouse sales, 4-H alumni events and social media challenges. "So many Tractor Supply customers have a true passion for 4-H and want to help our country's next generation of leaders gain the skills they need to succeed," said Jennifer Sirangelo, president and CEO, National 4-H Council. "By emphasizing individual development and group dynamics through hands-on learning and team challenges, 4-H youth programs can do just that."

The Paper Clover Campaign will return to Tractor Supply Company this fall, from October 4-15, 2017. Customers can participate in the 2017 Fall Paper Clover Campaign by purchasing paper clovers for $1 or more at checkout.

USDA seeks feedback from growers about 2017 crops, stocks, inventories, values

During the next several weeks, U.S. Department of Agriculture's (USDA) National Agricultural Statistics Service (NASS) will conduct two major mid-year surveys, the June Agricultural Survey and the June Area Survey. The agency will survey over 5,300 operators across Kansas to determine crop production and supply levels in 2017.

dividual 4-H Clubs greeted customers at stores and held their own promotions,

"Due to the widespread and significant impact of its results, the June Agricultural Survey and the June Area Survey are two of the most important and well-known surveys NASS conducts," explained Doug Bounds, state statistician of the NASS Kansas Field Office. "When growers respond to these surveys, they provide essential information that helps determine the prospective production and supply of major commodities in the United States for the 2017 crop year. The results are necessary for everyone who relies on agriculture for their livelihoods."

NASS gathers the data for the June Agricultural Survey online, by mail, phone, and in-person interviews. For the June Area Survey, agency representatives visit randomly selected tracts of land and interview the operators of any farm or ranch on that land. Growers provide information on crop acreage, grain stocks, livestock inventory, cash rents, land values, and value of sales.

NASS will compile and analyze the survey information and publish the results in a series of USDA reports, including the annual Acreage report and quarterly Grain Stocks report, both to be released June 30, 2017. Survey data contribute to NASS's monthly and annual Crop Production reports, as well as the annual Small Grains Summary and US-DA's monthly World Agricultural Supply and Demand Estimates report.

"NASS safeguards the privacy of all responses and only publishes data at the state and national levels, ensuring that no individual operation or producer can be identified," stated Bounds. "We recognize this is a hectic time for farmers and ranchers, but the information they provide helps U.S. agriculture remain viable and capable. I urge them to respond to these surveys and thank them for their cooperation," said Bounds.

All reports are available on the NASS website: http:// www.nass.usda.gov/Publica-

Perdue talks trade, labor and FMD at committee hearing Agriculture Secretary products can be sold, who and Foreign Agricultural tlemen's Beef Association "essentially unworkable," a former vetering

Sonny Perdue said USDA's new Undersecretary for Trade will be a dealmaker who is constantly on the road meeting with potential buyers to promote U.S. agriculture products around the world.

In a hearing before the House Ag Committee, Perdue said that the undersecretary will be tasked with figuring out where U.S.

wants them, who can pay for them and how do we strike a deal.

"This guy is going to be a million-mile flyer," Perdue said in testimony. "Foreign buyers want to see you in person. The presence is important."

Perdue's testimony comes after an announcement from USDA that a new Undersecretary for Trade Affairs position had been established. The position has yet to be filled; however, cattlemen are hopeful it will help fill the gaps left by the previous administra-

"This position will play a vital role in leading US-DA's efforts to capitalize on foreign demand for U.S. agriculture products," said Craig Uden, National Catpresident. "We look forward to working with the undersecretary to break down trade barriers and expand our ability to meet the growing demand for U.S. beef in key markets like Asia."

Perdue also spoke to the committee about the ag labor force. He said he is aware that the H-2A program in its current state is and USDA plans to present the administration with some ideas to streamline the program in order for it to be more dependable and more reliable.

Another topic discussed was the livestock industry's call for vaccine banks for both foot-and-mouth disease (FMD) and highly pathogenic avian influenza. Perdue noted that, as understands the benefits of vaccinations and that the nation cannot afford an FMD scare.

"We should look at vaccine banks as insurance. You can't have a house burn down and take insurance after the fact," Perdue commented. To read more, visit http://tinvurl.com/Trade-Labor-FMD.

Forty-one Kansas swine operations to be contacted for antimicrobial use survey

In May, the USDA's National Animal Health Monitoring System (NAHMS). in conjunction with US-DA's National Agricultural Statistics Service (NASS). began a four-month study concerning how antimicrobials are used in U.S. swine operations. This study focuses on antimicrobial use and stewardship practices on swine nursery and grower-finisher facilities with a capacity of at least 1,000 head. Forty-one swine operations will be contacted in Kansas.

Initial contacts will be made by representatives from NASS to inquire about producer interest in participating in the study. If the producer is interested, the NASS representative will obtain producer consent for inclusion in the study. In July, operators who agreed to participate in the study will be contacted to schedule an in-person interview conducted by KDA or USDA Veterinary field staff. Information collected during this study will be based on the producer's use of antimicrobials in 2016 and will serve as a baseline comparison prior to the 2017 implementation of the Veterinary Feed Directive (VFD) by the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA).

All information collected during these studies will be used for statistical purposes only and will only be published in aggregate form. Survey responses are kept confidential, by law, and are protected from Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) re-

Rancher calls on Congress to address 'sue and settle' abuse

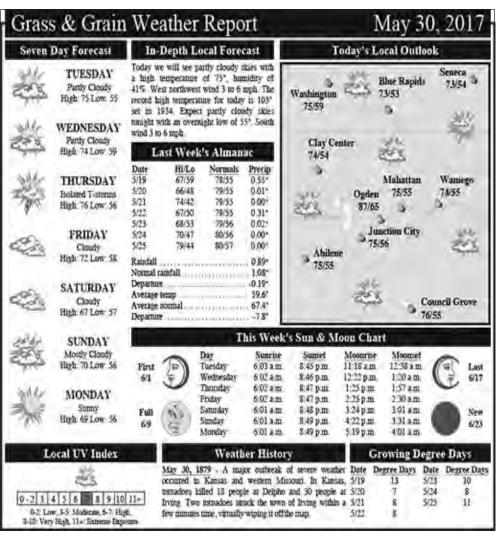

If family ranching operations and rural economies are going to survive another generation, Congress must address the problem of so-called "sue and settle" abuse. That's the message that Darcy Helmick, land manager for Simplot Land & Livestock, stressed to Congress in subcommittee testimony May 24.

Helmick testified before the House Committee on Oversight and Government Reform, Subcommittee on Intergovernmental Affairs. and Subcommittee on the Interior, Energy and Environment during its hearing to examine how environmental advocacy groups and federal agencies regulate through consent decrees using citizen lawsuit provisions in environmental laws, which is known as "sue and settle."

"In my extensive experience dealing with the federal grazing system and western land use in general, offensive litigation tactics by outside activist groups have served to totally derail business operations," said Helmick. "While it is critical that we maintain the right of citizens to litigate when necessary, reform is needed to prevent that right from being abused or exploited."

It is critical that permitted public lands users have a role in any settlement agreements and that federal employees at a local level have input, Helmick said.

"If they ever have a ropin' where the man that catches the most vegetation with his cattle wins, I'll git rich!"
