Recent trade developments could bring good news to America's heartland

Op-Ed from Farm Policy Facts

America's farmers have found themselves on the front lines of an ongoing trade war, but recent news on three major trade fronts has farmers across the heartland cautiously optimistic.

The Trump administration recently announced that they have reached an agreement in principle on a trade agreement with Japan, with a final agreement expected to be signed during the United Nations General Assembly.

Finalizing a trade agreement with Japan could secure valuable market access for several American commodities and ignite a new momentum for the President's trade agenda.

Trade attorney John Gilliland joined Groundwork to discuss what this means for agriculture and the status of several other ongoing trade negotiations.

While the details of the tentative agreement with Japan have not yet been publicly released, it may look very similar to the market access and tariff easement the U.S. would have received under the Trans-Pacific Partnership, now known as the Comprehensive and Progressive Agreement for Trans-Pacific Partnership (CPTPP).

The CPTPP took effect in December 2018 and gave several of our competitors, including Australia and New Zealand, preferential access to the Japanese market. A separate trade agreement between Japan and the European Union took effect in February 2019.

A driving objective for both the U.S. and Japan during negotiations has been to "get U.S. farm exports on an equal footing with these other countries," Gilliland said.

"Getting this deal with Japan now is really designed to make sure we don't lose any further advantages to exports in those countries," Gilliland said. "With every passing year that goes by we lose that advantage, or have that disadvantage so to speak, it gets that much harder to get that access back."

Gilliland shared with Groundwork listeners how key commodities such as beef, pork, wheat, dairy and corn will benefit from a completed agreement.

Japan isn't the only trade negotiation generating interest in rural America. Farmers and ranchers are also asking Congress to pass the U.S.-Mexico-Canada (USMCA) agreement this fall.

"(Passing USMCA) would give us much-needed market certainty," Gilliland said. "With so much else happening in the agriculture sector, not only in our export markets, but here at home, it's important to know that the access and the markets that we've had under NAFTA are going to remain in place."

And delivering on a trade deal with China that works towards resolving retaliatory tariffs and secures new market access for American agricultural products will be critical for farm country.

At the end of the day, American agricultural exports will always be a key component in trade negotiations because our farm products are competitive, have a positive impact on the U.S. economy and food security is tightly bound to national security.

"We are at the center of every one of these negotiations because we matter. And because we matter, I feel confident and optimistic that at the end of the day, these types of agreements, for them to come back to Washington with an agreement, it's going to have to work for agriculture," Gilliland said.

Farmers need international markets and we are grateful that Washington has taken a stand to expand export opportunities. It is our hope that trade negotiators can continue forging a positive path forward.

USDA offers disaster assistance for Kansas farmers hurt by 2018, 2019 disasters Agricultural producers affected by natural disasters in 2018 and 2019 can apply through the Wildfire and Hurricane Indemnity Program Plus (WHIP+). Sign-up for this U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) program began Sept. 11.

"There is no doubt that extreme weather has greatly impacted Kansas's agricultural producers over the last several years, and 2019 is no exception," said David Schemm, state executive director for Farm Service Agency (FSA) in Kansas. "With record amounts of crops prevented from planting nationwide and other devastation, more than $3 billion is available through this disaster relief package passed by Congress and signed by President Trump in early June."

WHIP+ Eligibility

WHIP+ will be available for eligible producers who have suffered eligible losses of certain crops, trees, bushes or vines in counties with a Presidential Emergency Disaster Declaration or a Secretarial Disaster Designation (primary counties only). Disaster losses must have been a result of hurricanes, floods, tornadoes, typhoons, volcanic activity, snowstorms or wildfires that occurred in 2018 or 2019. Also, producers in counties that did not receive a disaster declaration or designation may still apply for WHIP+ but must provide supporting documentation to establish that the crops were directly affected by a qualifying disaster loss.

A list of counties that received qualifying disaster declarations and designations is available at farmers.gov/recover/whip-plus. Because grazing and livestock losses, other than milk losses, are covered by other disaster recovery programs offered through FSA, those losses are not eligible for WHIP+.

Eligible crops include those for which federal crop insurance or Noninsured Crop Disaster Assistance Program (NAP) coverage is available, excluding crops intended for grazing. A list of crops covered by crop insurance is available through USDA's Risk Management Agency (RMA) Actuarial Information Browser at webapp.rma.usda.gov/apps/actuarialinformationbrowser.

The WHIP+ payment factor ranges from 75 percent to 95 percent, depending on the level of crop insurance coverage or NAP coverage that a producer obtained for the crop. Producers who did not insure their crops in 2018 or 2019 will receive 70 percent of the expected value of the crop. Insured crops (either crop insurance or NAP coverage) will receive between 75 percent and 95 percent of expected value; those who purchased the highest levels of coverage will receive 95 percent of the expected value.

At the time of sign-up, producers will be asked to provide verifiable and reliable production records. If a producer is unable to provide production records, WHIP+ payments will be determined based on the lower of either the actual loss certified by the producer and determined acceptable by FSA or the county expected yield and county disaster yield. The county disaster yield is the production that a producer would have been expected to make based on the eligible disaster conditions in the county.

WHIP+ payments for 2018 disasters will be eligible for 100 percent of their calculated value. WHIP+ payments for 2019 disasters will be limited to an initial 50 percent of their calculated value, with an opportunity to receive up to the remaining 50 percent after January 1, 2020, if sufficient funding remains.

Both insured and uninsured producers are eligible to apply for WHIP+. But all producers receiving WHIP+ payments will be required to purchase crop insurance or NAP, at the 60 percent coverage level or higher, for the next two available, consecutive crop years after the crop year for which WHIP+ payments were paid. Producers who fail to purchase crop insurance for the next two applicable, consecutive years will be required to pay back the WHIP+ payment.

Additional information about WHIP+ program eligibility and payment limitations can be found at farmers.gov/recover or by contacting your local USDA Service Center.

Additional Loss Coverage

The Milk Loss Program will provide payments to eligible dairy operations for milk that was dumped or removed without compensation from the commercial milk market because of a qualifying 2018 and 2019 natural disaster. Producers who suffered losses of harvested commodities, including hay, stored in on-farm structures in 2018 and 2019 will receive assistance through the On-Farm Storage Loss Program.

Additionally, producers with trees, bushes or vines can receive both cost-share assistance through FSA's Tree Assistance Program (TAP) for the cost of replanting and rehabilitating eligible trees and WHIP+ will provide payments based on the loss value of the tree, bush or vine itself. Therefore, eligible producers may receive both a TAP and a 2017 WHIP or WHIP+ payment for the same acreage. In addition, TAP policy has been updated to assist eligible orchardists or nursery tree growers of pecan trees with a tree mortality rate that exceeds 7.5 percent (adjusted for normal mortality) but is less than 15 percent (adjusted for normal mortality) for losses incurred during 2018.

Prevented Planting

Agricultural producers faced significant challenges planting crops in 2019 in many parts of the country. All producers with flooding or excess moisture-related prevented planting insurance claims in calendar year 2019 will receive a prevented planting supplemental disaster ("bonus") payment equal to 10 percent of their prevented planting indemnity, plus an additional 5 percent will be provided to those who purchased harvest price option coverage.

As under 2017 WHIP, WHIP+ will provide prevented planting assistance to uninsured producers, NAP producers and producers who may have been prevented from planting an insured crop in the 2018 crop year and those 2019 crops that had a final planting date prior to January 1, 2019.

For more information on FSA disaster assistance programs, please contact your local USDA service center or visit farmers.gov/recover. For all available USDA disaster assistance programs, go to USDA's disaster resources website.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Hay market trade was slow, demand was slow, and prices steady. Most hay and forage pricing stayed steady, although there remains a softer undertone to grinder hay and grass hays due to lower quality and high abundance. While the autumnal equinox is rapidly approaching, Mother Nature is having trouble letting go of the summer. Hot, dry and windy weather was the norm for many Kansas areas. The southwest region remains in abnormally dry (D0) to moderate drought (D1) conditions, with D0 at 13 pct. and D1 near 2 pct. If you have any extra hay to sell and/or need hay here in Kansas, use the services of the Internet Hay Exchange: www.hayexchange.com/ks.php.

Uncertainty is affecting cattle prices

By Derrell Peel, Oklahoma State University Extension

Cattle and beef markets have decreased from April highs with uncertainty in a variety of factors weighing on markets the past month. The latest threat of additional tariffs on Mexico rattled many markets in early June, including cattle and beef markets. It appears that the threat was removed, and cash and futures markets may stabilize somewhat. However, ongoing uncertainty about trade and the politics of trade continue to take a toll on agricultural and other markets.

It will be important to watch the multitude of volatile factors that may continue to further impact markets.

Weather is another source of uncertainty negatively affecting cattle markets. While good moisture conditions bode well for forage growth in general, ongoing flooding and excessively wet conditions are limiting grazing and hay production in some regions. Sloppy feedlot conditions continue to hamper feedlot production in some areas. Additionally, the record-late planting of corn and soybeans this year is adding uncertainty about corn acreage and yield and is beginning to push corn prices higher. There is little doubt that the corn crop will be smaller than was anticipated just a few weeks ago, but carryover levels are still expected to be adequate. While significantly higher feed prices are not anticipated at this time, the uncertainty remains.

Weaker beef demand may be the biggest threat to cattle and beef markets for the remainder of the year. Strong beef demand supported cattle and beef markets in 2017 and 2018, but there are signs that some weakness may be developing in beef demand in both domestic and international markets. While unemployment remains very low, other indications of weakness in the macro-economy are concerning and have led to reduced forecasts for U.S. economic growth in 2019, largely due to ongoing effects of tariffs and trade disruptions.

Relatively slow domestic income growth and higher prices for major consumer items (such as gasoline), combined with record-large supplies of beef, pork and poultry, may be limiting domestic beef demand going forward in 2019. Relatively wet and cold weather thus far has likely stifled summer beef demand somewhat and probably contributed to an early seasonal peak in boxed-beef prices and recent weakness in wholesale beef values.

Reduced beef exports and higher beef imports through the first four months of the year, combined with weak pork and broiler exports, suggest that the meat complex is struggling so far this year in international markets. The uncertain — but undoubtedly large — effect of African Swine Fever (ASF) in China and other countries may provide some boost to protein markets in the coming months. Increased demand in China for pork, as well as poultry and beef, will likely provide some support, directly and indirectly, to protein markets around the world. The United States exports little beef to China, and that's not likely to change anytime soon, but U.S. beef markets may enjoy some indirect support as a result of the protein deficit in China.

The uncertainty plaguing cattle and beef markets probably should not change most producers' strategic plans for this year, but it will be important to watch the multitude of volatile factors that may continue to or further impact markets. Short-run volatility may affect timing and other tactical considerations for production and marketing, and highlights the value of flexibility and the ability to be nimble in these uncertain times.

Fall Forestry Field Day showcases working forestry management

Share collective experiences and the latest research for the holistic management of Kansas woodlands and related natural resources at the 25th Annual Fall Forestry Field Day on Oct. 9 at the Geyer Forestry Research Center and Pottawatomie State Fishing Lake No. 2.

The event, from 8:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m., will begin at the Geyer Forestry Research Center north of Manhattan. Parking is available at 6625 Dyer Rd. The center offers a variety of woodlands where more than 55 years of research has helped Kansans grow the best quality black walnut, bur oak and other valuable trees.

Participants will hear about management options for invasive plants and pests, see a portable sawmill demonstration, and learn about the resources available to them through the American Tree Farm System.

Working forestry management will be the focus of afternoon sessions at Pottawatomie State Fishing Lake No. 2. Experts will share their insight on wildlife management, using prescribed fire as a tool for managing woodlands, working forestry management and landscape scale restorations. Field tours of previously managed plots will be a part of these discussions.

Registration for the day is $18 and includes lunch at The Little Grill. Register online at https://fallfieldday19.eventbrite.com. For more information or questions, contact Shane Neel with the Kansas Forest Service at 785-617-0717.

New signup deadline for Dairy Margin Coverage is September 27

The U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) has extended the deadline to September 27 for dairy producers to enroll in the Dairy Margin Coverage (DMC) program for 2019. The deadline had been September 20.

Authorized by the 2018 Farm Bill and available through USDA's Farm Service Agency (FSA), the program offers reasonably priced protection to dairy producers when the difference between the all-milk price and the average feed cost (the margin) falls below a certain dollar amount selected by the producer.

"More than 21,200 dairy operations have already signed up for DMC, but we're providing an additional week to help ensure interested producers have time to come into the office," said Bill Northey, USDA Under Secretary for Farm Production and Conservation. "With smaller margins and increased feed costs, DMC has resulted in almost $230 million in payments disbursed. I know that some farmers may still be cautious given their experiences with former dairy support programs, but producers who have not signed up yet should come into a local office to learn how much money the program can put into their pockets."

Almost half of the producers who have signed up so far are taking advantage of the 25 percent premium discount by locking in for five years of margin protection coverage.

Margin payments have triggered for each month from January through July. Dairy producers who elect higher coverage levels could be eligible for payments for all seven months. Under certain levels, the amount paid to dairy farmers will exceed the cost of the premium.

For example, a dairy operation that chooses to enroll for 2019 with an established production history of 3 million pounds (30,000 cwt.) and elects the $9.50 coverage level on 95 percent of production will pay $4,275 in total premium payments for all of 2019 and receive $15,437.50 in DMC payments for all margin payments announced to date. Additional payments will be made if calculated margins remain below the $9.50/cwt. level for any remaining months of 2019.

"My message to those dairy producers who are hurting out there: Don't leave this kind of financial assistance on the table," said Northey, who announced the deadline extension as part of a hearing in front of the U.S. House of Representatives Committee on Agriculture. "Producers across the country have told us that DMC is a great risk management tool that works well, and it can work for you, too."

Pursuing wellness in time of stress on the farm

By John Forshee, District Director/Community Vitality Agent, River Valley Extension District

The River Valley Extension District Board and a team of RVED agents has made a significant commitment to supporting our agricultural community as they face the challenges of the farm economy. We have certainly stepped out of our comfort zone, and we are asking our producers and their families to do the same as we pursue wellness in the face of adversity.

One of the resources I would like to reference is the Kansas State University and North Dakota State University collaborative piece entitled My Coping Strategies Plan, which is a part of the Managing Stress and Pursuing Wellness in Times of Tight Margins series. Although this resource is directed toward the agricultural community, in terms of title, I am finding it can also be helpful to anyone no matter what their occupation or level of stress might be.

The resource breaks the strategies into six categories where we should be pursuing wellness: physical, mental, emotional/spiritual, personal/relational, work/professional, and financial/practical.

We know that farmers, just like everyone, have extremely busy schedules these days and if "fixes" to problems or issues seem too overwhelming with time or cash resources then we just do not sustain them for very long, if we start them at all. The thing I really like about this resource is, it does not ask you to "eat the elephant" in one bite. Rather, it gives a number of simple options under each of the six categories and asks the user to select two strategies from each category to add to their toolbox.

Twelve tools for your wellness toolbox might look something like this:

• Physical: Exercise 20 minutes or more daily; Get a medical checkup with your local health care provider;

• Mental: Spend ten minutes per day to prioritize what you need to do and plan your activities; Take regular five to ten-minute breaks throughout the day to relax and recharge;

• Emotional: Write down three things that you are grateful for daily; Share your concerns with a counselor, minister, or trusted friend;

• Personal: Reserve 15 minutes each day for uninterrupted conversation with spouse/family; Get involved or stay connected with a friend or group of friends;

• Professional: Discuss the need of the farm, but do not let them occupy all other aspects of your life; Seek constructive feedback on your operation to improve efficiency or to grow;

• Practical: Create a family budget and seek to live within the means of the current situation; Select three healthy habits (eight hours of sleep, eat healthy, read something new) to do daily!

Our team has had a great deal of discussion around finding a coping strategy that works for you as an individual. One of our agents likes to fish as a way to relax and unwind from the stresses of the day-to-day. For me, on the other hand, fishing just adds to my stress and is a reminder of one more thing I do not do well. That is the last thing I need when I am already feeling stressed. My point is, there is no one "fix," but rather we must each evaluate our strengths, weaknesses, challenges we currently face, and the opportunities that are before us. We can then develop our Wellness Toolbox to create a sustainable lifestyle that supports our long-term well-being.

The My Coping Strategies Plan is available through any K-State Research and Extension Office.

National Hunting and Fishing Day is Sept. 28

For many outdoor enthusiasts, any day they can spend hunting or fishing is a day to celebrate. Now there is one more reason to observe our hunting and fishing opportunities. Governor Laura Kelly has proclaimed Saturday, September 28 as National Hunting and Fishing Day in Kansas to celebrate Kansas' sportsmen and women and to recognize the many and varied social, cultural, economic, and ecological benefits of our time-honored traditions of hunting and angling.

Kansans have enjoyed a rich and storied tradition of hunting and angling since before Kansas became the 34th state in January 1861. The state's sportswomen and men were among the first conservationists to support establishing the predecessors of the Kansas Department of Wildlife, Parks and Tourism (KDWPT) to conserve fish, wildlife and their habitat. Through their license fees, outdoor enthusiasts have funded state efforts to provide for healthy and sustainable natural resources.

Upon realizing that license fees alone were insufficient to restore and sustain healthy fish and wildlife populations, sportsmen and women supported self-imposed federal excise taxes on firearms, ammunition, fishing equipment and motorboat fuel to raise additional conservation funds. To this day, wildlife conservation in Kansas and other states is funded primarily by sportswomen and men, through this American System of Conservation Funding – a "user pays – public benefits" approach that is widely recognized as the most successful model of funding fish and wildlife management in the world.

In fiscal year 2018 alone, Kansas' sportswomen and men generated more than $32 million in license and permit fees through this system to support the conservation efforts of the KDWPT. What's more, Kansas' 527,000 hunters and anglers support the state's economy through spending more than $629 million while engaged in their pursuits which supports more than 9,331 jobs and generates $69 million in state and local taxes.

National Hunting and Fishing Day was established in 1972 to celebrate and recognize hunters and anglers for their immense contributions to fish and wildlife conservation, and to our society. The KDWPT is grateful for the passion of hunters and anglers in supporting the state's conservation programs that provide sustainable habitats benefiting all the species of wildlife and fish that Kansans enjoy.

New Generation Supplements

Cost Effective Protein Supplementation

The most cost effective forage a cow can consume is the forage she can harvest herself. However, protein often times becomes the most limiting nutrient for cattle grazing crop residues and dormant grass pastures. In these situations protein supplementation is required to efficiently harvest energy from these protein deficient forage-based diets.

Studies conducted at Kansas State University would illustrate that NGS protein supplements support both gain and efficiency when fed in conjunction with protein deficient forages. Find out more from your local New Generation Supplements dealer, Key Feeds.

Bumper crop of pasture weeds needs action

Leonardo da Vinci might have been describing the last few growing seasons for pastures when he wrote, "Even the richest soil, if left uncultivated, will produce the rankest weeds."

University of Missouri Extension livestock specialist Gene Schmitz says the Renaissance polymath's words ring true.

"The past one to two years have been hard on pasture stands," Schmitz says. "Last summer's drought followed by a wet winter and summer this year has led to a bumper crop of ragweed, foxtail and other pasture weeds. Trying to control weeds and rejuvenate pastures looks to be a major challenge in some areas."

The first step is to assess what plants are growing in the pasture. If more than half of them are undesirable plants, consider complete renovation.

If renovation seems the best option and forage is in short supply during summer, adding native warm-season grasses allows for grazing and haying flexibility. It also provides important rest for cool-season forages, he says.

Start now for spring warm-season grass establishment. Test soil and fertilize accordingly. "Weed control is crucial in the establishment process of warm-season perennial forages and can begin this fall," Schmitz says.

This option calls for spraying glyphosate in fall and then seeding a winter annual such as wheat, triticale or cereal rye. Promptly remove the winter annual crop in spring. Apply glyphosate again when winter annuals regrow after spring harvest, then seed native warm-season grasses. Monitor weed pressure in the new seeding and be prepared to control both broadleaf and grassy weeds.

Select the type of forage in a renovation program based on soil fertility, renovation and maintenance expense, and ability to manage different forage types efficiently.

These are not easy decisions, says Schmitz. Poor and weedy pastures may force some producers into hasty pasture-seeding decisions. When deciding what's best for your pastures, plan and use current information such as soil fertility, desirable forage plant density and the need to fill forage voids throughout the year, he says.

K-State to host Southeast Kansas Grazing School

Grass is our cheapest commodity to raise cattle or other grazing livestock. By extending the grazing season, producers can decrease expenses and increase profitability. Most producers feed hay 120 to 180 days out of the year, if hay is fed from November to April. Feeding hay is more expensive and time-consuming than having the animals grazing. If producers can increase their grazing duration and limit the amount of hay being fed, a tremendous cost savings and improved profitability would be seen.

Saturday, Sept. 28th, K-State Research and Extension will host the Southeast Kansas Grazing School from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. just south of Fort Scott at ReproLogix. They will cover a variety of topics and have the chance to tour different facilities.

Some of the topics we will discuss include: Extending the grazing season with cover crops and crop residue. Cover crops can mean turnips, oats, wheat, etc. in corn stubble, but it also means planting a cool season forage in some of our warm season grasses. We will explore rotational grazing, strip grazing and stockpiling of forages. Pasture fertility and weed control will be discussed as well as winter feeding sites. The day will wrap up with the featured speaker Wesley Tucker from the University of Missouri discussing the economics of grazing. Wesley is not just an economist; he is also a producer himself and practices what he teaches. He is entertaining and very knowledgeable. Other speakers will include Jaymelynn Farney, KSU area beef specialist, Wendie Powell, Wildcat District livestock production agent, and Dale Helwig, Cherokee County agricultural agent.

Cost for the event is $10 per person and lunch will be provided. Contact Southwind, Wildcat or Cherokee County Extension Service to register for the event. Registration will be payable at the door. Sponsors for the event include Kansas Forage and Grassland Council, ReproLogix, Landmark National Bank, and K-State Research and Extension.

For more details or questions, contact the Wildcat Extension District at 620-784-5337 or email wendiepowell@ksu.edu.

KSU and collaborators double down on making water and nutrients go further on Southern Plains farms

By Mary Lou Peters

Kansas State University is leading a multi-agency team focused on improving water and nitrogen use efficiencies and improving soil health in the semi-arid southern Great Plains.

The nearly $10 million five-year research effort is led by K-State University Distinguished Professor Chuck Rice and includes a transdisciplinary team from the U.S. Department of Agriculture Agricultural Research Service, Oklahoma State University and the University of Maryland.

The team will conduct research, teaching, and Extension activities to:

Increase the growth of agricultural total factor productivity or TFP, from the current 1.5% to 2% per year and agricultural production by 2% annually;

Improve water and nitrogen use efficiency by 50%; and Reduce losses due to environmental stresses by 20%.

The work is funded by the USDA National Institute for Food and Agriculture.

Crop yields vary widely in the southern Plains, largely because of erratic weather patterns which complicate decision-making for farmers. The constant uncertainty over how much – or how little – precipitation will fall pushes many farmers to grow winter wheat for both grain production and cattle grazing, but that provides relatively low nutrient use efficiency for the cattle and winter wheat can be subject to high weed pressure.

"Consequently, crop and food animal production in this region lags well below its potential, and 50% or more of the precipitation received by cropland is lost by evaporation from soil or is used by weeds," Rice said.

The long-term goal of the new research effort, he said, is to sustainably increase the productivity of farms that solely rely on rainfall rather than irrigation in the southern Great Plains by improving the efficient use of water and nitrogen, plus reduce yield losses due to environmental stresses and enhance soil health.

The interdisciplinary team includes researchers, educators and Extension professionals with expertise in agronomy, crop production, soil science, modeling, economics and sociology.

The multi-pronged effort will focus on developing effective management strategies for diversifying and intensifying southern Great Plains cropping systems; developing and using innovative sensors and modeling technologies for improved mid-season input decisions; providing information to farmers and others on the resulting information and technologies; and creating educational opportunities to recruit and train the next generation of scientists to work in agriculture.

The program will provide research experience for over 50 undergraduates recruited across the country and train over 20 graduate and post-doctoral students.

Other K-State researchers on the team are Ignacio Ciampitti, Romulo Lollato, Anita Dille, Andres Patrignani, Doohong Min, Dorivar Ruiz Diaz, Eduardo Santos and Vara Prasad.

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crotts

Corn and wheat futures were higher for the week, while the soybeans gave up some of the prior week's gains. Fresh news was limited to the latest round of Chinese trade talks and how much goodwill ag buying they will do. There has been a little bit of harvest activity around the country, and as one would expect, harvest is slightly behind normal because of the late planting and late maturity. Yield reports have been variable and it looks like expecting another yield cut in the October supply and demand report is reasonable.

I keep going back to 1993, and in that year USDA wasn't done tweaking yields, or acreage, for that matter, until we got to the January supply and demand report. We probably have a long way to go until we get a handle on corn and soybean production, so wait patiently for USDA to release less bearish numbers.

On the charts it sure looks like the corn, wheat, and beans have made some significant lows. In the case of the corn, the December contract is well off of the lows, and is now testing the critical resistance at the $3.75-$3.77 level. A move above $3.77 is necessary to encourage short covering and to maintain any kind of bullish momentum. If we don't get that done by the September 30th Quarterly Stocks Report, then we are probably going to retest the contract lows.

The December KW moved above the key resistance at the $4.10 level and it looks like the chart is forming an inverted head and shoulders bottom, which suggests we are going to see a move back to the $4.50 area. The wheat has seen some solid demand lately, which is certainly a help, but the gains in the corn market are very helpful too. If we can avoid new lows in the corn, it will make it much easier for the wheat to move up to $4.50.

Soybeans were the strongest market after the supply and demand report, but were the weakest this week. The November contract is back below the 50-day moving average, but should find solid support between $8.71 and $8.77. We may find that the soybeans have the greatest upside potential at some point in the future, but to really get the bean market moving, we will have to see the Asian hog herd rebuilt, and that will take time. In the short run, yield will be key.

Cattle futures had a decent week. The front months of the feeder cattle contracts got back all of the post-fire losses and the Feeder Index has been trending higher for a couple of weeks, which is supportive. Live cattle futures have not fared as well. The cash cattle market did move up to the $101 level in Kansas, but the October live cattle futures need to move up to the $107 area to get back the post-fire losses, so there is a long way to go to close that gap.

The Cattle on Feed numbers were more or less as expected, with the on feed number at 98%, placements at 91% and marketings at 98%. The numbers themselves are supportive since the on feed and placements figures are lower than year-ago levels, but since it is not a surprise, it probably won't have any market impact.

The Bad Year

By Mike Penning

Fall harvest time, there is a light breeze, I get the combine out to grease.

Going to be on time, going to get it done. But some parts I discover barely holding on.

Two weeks it took to make the repair, not one raindrop fell through the air.

At last I am ready, the tires are aired, combine fueled and greased, we head to the field.

Got to catch up, so far behind, then on my windshield appears a wet line.

The rain put the combine back in the shed, and I felt like going back to bed.

But other work needed to be done, fence fixed, cows checked, and feed to be mixed.

Between rains and snow, brief dry spells would show, and some corn and all the beans were gleaned from the fields.

Bad weather set in, to which seemed like no end.

It rained and rained, then froze and snowed, then thawed to endless mud.

Then rained and rained and oh so cold, and how the wind blowed.

And through this time of weather hell,

my cows gave birth, my luck was cursed.

Day after day the death toll rose,

all my efforts were opposed.

"How did calving go today?"

my wife asked in a harmless way.

A lump formed in my throat, my eyes got moist,

I tried to look away.

I chose my words carefully, and spoke in a halting way.

Could not break down, or show a tear, that would not do, for the man they looked to.

This is what I had to say:

"Two calves I found dead, two more I brought in, to warm their chill away.

Warm milk I put in their bellies, and a prayer for them did I say.

Another one I left with the cow, it was up walking, tho' in this weather I don't know how.

Will check later to see if it nursed, but have to remember my luck is cursed."

Her eyes widened with alarm as she saw the emotion in my face and in my trembling voice.

My spirit was broken, but I had to keep going, it was my only choice.

Calving was done, and then came the sun to dry the mud away.

One last corn field remained to be harvested, the combine came out again.

But two weeks before the south wind blew hard, and knocked a third of it down.

Sad as it be, a third less, to haul to town.

One more job done, it should of been fun but problems were weighing me down.

Then the rain returned in a fury as if to shout,

"Haha! I'm not done with you yet!"

Cows needed to be hauled to pasture, but the unpaved roads were a disaster.

Ran out of hay, so had to pay, high price to feed my cows.

One day was less muddy than was before,

so hitched to trailer we tried.

We spun, we slid, we almost died, but grass the cows did find.

The fields dried enough to plant the crops, but now the moisture is gone.

We pray for rain so our crops will grow, to make a harvest grand.

If no rain, not much to harvest, when can't even get a stand.

So much else I could of wrote, that would fill a page or two.

Like the struggles of milking our dairy cows or putting up hay, just to name a few.

This has been the hardest year to farm, that I can recall.

But with God's grace I will try again, you just can't win them all.
