

Marshall comments on establishment of new National Heritage Area

U.S. Senator Roger Marshall, M.D. issued the following statement regarding the proposed establishment of a new National Heritage Area in north-central Kansas and south-central Nebraska:

"The National Park Service's National Heritage Areas program help regions tell their story and highlights the cultural significance of their past," said Marshall. "As a Republican, I believe in local control and local decision-making whenever possible. It is up to the communities included in the proposed National Heritage Area to determine the future of this proposal. I will not get involved until after sufficient local support for the proposal has been proven."

Background: Kansas is currently home to Freedom's Frontier, one of the 49 National Heritage Areas operating in the U.S. which encompasses 29 eastern Kansas and 12 western Missouri counties and promotes stories of the Kansas-Missouri Border War and enduring struggles for freedom. Just like our national historic trail systems, these programs are informational in nature and barred from imposing rules or regulations on private property owners. They require congressional action to designate a new area, and are prohibited from impacting the ownership of private property within the designated area.

We had a large run of cattle for our sale held Friday, April 16th. Many consignments of Fall calves were offered. The weaned calves found the most interest. However, the unweaned calves with quality were still finding good demand, with the over all calf market being from steady to weaker prices. Stocker feeder cattle sold unevenly steady to spots $2 lower on the kind offered. Cull cows sold $2-$4 lower on a large offering. STEER CALVES — 350-550 LBS. <table border="0" style="width: 100%;"> <tr><td>Leonardville</td><td>8 # Kansas Hay Market Report

Hay market prices for the week ending April 10 were steady across the state; Demand was light to moderate and deliveries slowed a bit more. The alfalfa has greened up and stands range in height from 3" to 8" in some areas and folks have been busy spraying for weeds and pests, with both weevil and aphids making their appearance in fields. It won't be long now before those swathers are out and running. According to the US Drought Monitor for the week of April 6th, abnormal dryness (D0) remained at 10%, moderate drought (D1) remained at 10%, and severe drought (D2) remained at 2%. If you have any extra hay to sell and/or need hay here in Kansas, use the services of the Internet Hay Exchange: www.hayexchange.com/ks.php.

Twenty states support Meat Institute's challenge to the constitutionality of California's Proposition 12

Twenty states filed an amicus curiae brief with the U.S. Supreme Court supporting the petition filed by the North American Meat Institute (Meat Institute) challenging the constitutionality of California's Proposition 12 (Prop 12).

"The governments of nearly half the states agree," said Meat Institute president and CEO Julie Anna Potts, "if California is allowed to apply its laws to conduct in other states, a single state will dictate policies in all others, encouraging a patchwork of regulations and threatening the free flow of interstate commerce."

The brief was filed by Indiana, joined by Alabama, Alaska, Arkansas, Georgia, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, Oklahoma, South Carolina, South Dakota, Texas, Utah, West Virginia, and Wyoming.

"It (Prop 12) freely permits California to impose regulations directly on out-of-state commercial conduct and thereby fosters inconsistent state regulatory obligations and enables tit-for-tat state regulatory conflict," the states said, "The ultimate result may be transformation of America's current integrated national market into a patchwork of regulatory regions."

In February, the Meat Institute filed a petition for a writ of certiorari asking the Supreme Court to review an earlier ruling of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in the Meat Institute's challenge to the constitutionality of California's Proposition 12: The Farm Animal Confinement Initiative. The Meat Institute opposes the law because it is unconstitutional and will hurt the nation's food value chain by significantly increasing costs for producers and consumers.

The question in the case is whether the U.S. Constitution permits California to extend its police power beyond its territorial borders by banning the sale of wholesome pork and veal products sold into California unless out-of-state farmers restructure their facilities to meet animal-confinement standards dictated by California.

In its brief, the Meat Institute urged the Court to grant review because the "Ninth Circuit's decision conflicts with the decisions of other federal courts of appeals on the question whether the Constitution limits a state's ability to extend its police power beyond its territorial borders through a trade barrier dictating production standards in other states and countries." Allowing Prop 12 to stand "insulates in-state farmers from out-of-state competition, while imposing crushing burdens on out-of-state farmers and producers who have no political voice to shape the regulations that California has unilaterally determined to foist upon their operations outside of California."

The North American Meat Institute is the leading voice for the meat and poultry industry. The Meat Institute's members process the vast majority of U.S. beef, pork, lamb, and poultry, as well as manufacture the equipment and ingredients needed to produce the safest and highest quality meat and poultry products.

Thompson announces slate of pro-innovation agriculture bills addressing climate change

Republican Leader of the House Agriculture Committee, Glenn 'G.T.' Thompson (PA-15) has announced five pieces of legislation to address climate change through natural solutions.

Mr. Thompson introduced the Sponsoring USDA Sustainability Targets in Agriculture to Incentivize Natural Solutions Act, or SUSTAINS Act. The bill encourages private-sector partnerships for agriculture sustainability by allowing businesses to invest in conservation practices in geographic regions of their choice. The bill also would allow the USDA to match these funds.

"Agriculture Republicans are crafting innovative climate solutions by empowering the original stewards of our land—our farmers, ranchers, and foresters. These thoughtful, science-based policies will help promote a stronger agriculture economy by growing climate-friendly innovations that are already being carried out by producers," said Thompson. "We cannot sacrifice a healthy economy for a healthy environment, and vice versa. Natural solutions work, and we know producers are part of the solution, not part of the problem."

"This is an initial slate of ideas to improve the productivity of America's agricultural sector while reducing our carbon footprint, and we will be rolling out more proposals during the Congress. I look forward to discussions with stakeholders in the private sector, our colleagues in the Biden administration, and members on both sides of the aisle in the House and Senate to build on these proposals and move them forward," Thompson said.

Additional proposals include:

Doug LaMalfa (CA-01): Restoring Environments, Soils, Trees and Operations to develop the Rural Economy Act, or the RESTORE Act;

Rodney Davis (IL-13): Naturally Offsetting Emissions by Managing and Implementing Tillage Strategies Act, or the NO EMITS Act;

Dusty Johnson (SD-At Large): Forestry Improvements to Restore the Environment Act, or the FIRE Act, and;

Ashley Hinson (IA-01): Producing Responsible Energy and Conservation Incentives and Solutions for the Environment Act, or the PRECISE Act

NRCS celebrates five million acres enrolled in conservation easements

U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) Natural Resources Conservation Service (NRCS) and private landowners have partnered to protect more than five million acres of wetlands, grasslands, and prime farmlands (an area the size of New Jersey). In Kansas, NRCS enrolled 162,520 acres, helping achieve this important conservation milestone.

"The nation's farmers, ranchers, and private landowners are critical to conserving our nation's natural resources for future generations," said Monty R. Breneman, acting state conservationist. "We want to celebrate their efforts in helping us protect sensitive lands, support wildlife, and confront challenges like climate change." NRCS has offered voluntary conservation easements through the Farm Bill for 28 years, through programs like Agricultural Conservation Easement Program (ACEP), which helps landowners, land trusts, and other entities protect, restore, and enhance wetlands, grasslands, and working farms and ranches through conservation easements. These programs benefit participants and the American public by creating cleaner air, water, and open spaces.

Wetland Easements
Wetland easements totaling over 2.8 million acres nationwide and 31,293 acres in Kansas improve water quality by filtering sediments and chemicals, reducing flooding, recharging groundwater, protecting biological diversity, and providing opportunities for educational, scientific, and limited recreational activities.

Agricultural Land Easements
Agricultural land easements protect the long-term viability of the Nation's food supply by preventing conversion of productive working lands to non-agricultural uses. These easements have been crucial to protecting rangelands and farmsteads from urban encroachment, ensuring the most productive lands remain working lands. Easements also can be used to protect floodplains, grasslands, and forests, providing public benefits, including carbon sequestration, water quality, historic preservation, wildlife habitat and protection of open space. Agricultural land easements, including grassland easements, total more than 1.9 million acres nationwide and 90,987 acres in Kansas.

Carbon Sequestration and Easements
Working with private landowners to preserve and restore wetlands, grasslands, forests, and farmlands is integral to USDA's efforts to build resiliency and reduce the impacts of climate change across the nation. Easements protect sensitive lands from development in perpetuity, and landowners can partner with NRCS to implement voluntary climate-smart management practices that maximize the amount of carbon sequestered from the atmosphere and stored in soils or plant biomass across these landscapes.

Under the Biden-Harris administration, USDA is engaged in a whole-of-government effort to combat the climate crisis and conserve and protect our nation's lands, biodiversity and natural resources including our soil, air, and water. Through conservation practices and partnerships, USDA aims to enhance economic growth and create new income streams for farmers, ranchers, producers, and private foresters. Successfully meeting these challenges will require USDA to pursue a coordinated approach alongside stakeholders, including state, local, and tribal governments.

Enroll in Easements Farmers, ranchers, and private foresters looking to enroll farmland, grasslands, or wetlands in a conservation easement should contact their local USDA Service Center.

USDA offers a variety of conservation programs that provide help to plan and implement conservation practices on farms, ranches, or forests. Learn more about putting conservation to work through our Conservation at Work offsite link image video series.

USDA Service Centers are open for business by phone appointment only, and field work will continue with appropriate social distancing. All Service Center visitors wishing to conduct business are required to call their local Service Center to schedule a phone appointment. # Massey Ferguson RB 4160P Protec baler redefines forage production

AGCO Corporation, a global leader in the design, manufacture and distribution of agricultural machinery and precision ag technology, introduces the Massey Ferguson® RB 4160P Protec combo baler. Now, producers can focus on harvesting forage at optimum condition, preserving it at peak nutritive value for livestock — even when Mother Nature doesn't cooperate.

With the Protec, AGCO continues its legacy of offering innovative hay and forage solutions. The unit combines all the features found on the RB Series silage balers with an integrated bale-wrapping unit, allowing producers to harvest and ensile high-moisture forages in one simple process.

"In climates with high humidity and lots of rain, putting up hay traditionally can be a challenge, so many forage growers are turning to baled silage," says Dane Mosel, marketing product specialist for hay and forage at AGCO. "Not only do they avoid the drydown issues, but they can harvest their forage at the ideal growth stage for maximum nutritional value."

Whether harvesting forage for a dairy or beef operation, the versatile RB 4160 Protec can handle any crop a grower wishes to bale. In addition to plastic-wrapped baleage, the machine can be used to mesh wrap forage before bagging as silage, as well as to bale dry hay, straw and even course material such as corn stover.

Individually wrapped bales offer feed quality and transport advantages

Capturing and preserving a forage's nutritional value is one benefit of silage. Mosel says that by wrapping a silage bale as soon as it leaves the bale chamber, more protein and nutrients are retained for animals to consume.

"It takes less than a minute from the time forage enters the Protec's pickup to the time the wrapped bale is released," he says. "That preserves the nutritional quality the grower worked so hard to achieve in that crop. Feeding such premium-quality forage may actually lower ration costs because you don't need to feed as much or need as many supplements."

In 2020, AGCO hay and forage specialist Jessica Williamson conducted a field trial comparing forage quality from silage bales that were wrapped at varying intervals after baling. She found that delaying the wrapping process by as little as 24 hours led to a nearly 4 percent decrease in the availability of digestible proteins, as well as reductions in total digestible nutrients and volatile fatty acid score, an indicator of the success of the ensiling process.

Mosel notes that inline tube wrapping delays the ensiling process, because the bales must first be moved to the field edge or a central location. Air can be trapped in the space between tube-wrapped bales, reducing effective fermentation. Quality also may be lost when the tube is opened and oxygen is reintroduced to the bales inside.

"Once that seal is broken, the forage inside is susceptible to spoilage, especially when the weather gets warm," he adds. "That's not a concern when bales are wrapped individually. They also can be transported, stored or sold with relative ease."

Commercial-strength engineering ensures reliability

Built with durability and long life in mind, the Protec baler has a robust chassis and rides on high-flotation tires selected to handle the machine's 14,000-pound weight. The baler components — including the pickup, bale chamber and net-wrap system — are identical to the RB 4160V silage baler, which debuted at the 2018 Farm Progress Show and produces 4-by-5-foot bales.

"We have standard RBs in the field with 50,000 to 60,000 bale counts and still going strong, so these balers are built to handle whatever you can throw at them," Mosel says.

With a tine-to-tine width of 73 inches, the cam-less pickup ensures that even heavy, wet forages feed smoothly into the bale chamber. Because there is no cam track, there are fewer moving parts, making the baler both quieter and more reliable with less maintenance and fewer adjustments.

The Protec baler features two banks of Xtra-cut™ hydraulically operated knives. Operators can select zero, eight, nine or 17 knives to attain forage cuts as small as 2.65 inches in length, allowing for improved forage digestibility. Once the crop is inside the bale chamber, the Constant Pressure System (CPS) ensures density stays consistent through the entire baling process.

"The denser the bale, the less oxygen when it's wrapped, which improves the ensiling process," Mosel says, adding that the Protec's variable chamber forms bales that are four feet wide and 35.5 to 63 inches in diameter.

Wrapping is easy with Protec

With its unique design, the combination baler's wrapping unit is rugged enough to easily wrap silage bales that could weigh nearly 3,000 pounds. Yet it's compact enough for greater maneuverability in the field and ease when transporting and storing.

In addition to two rolls of net wrap, the RB 4160P can carry 14 rolls of 750mm or 500mm film on board. Three film pre-stretching options are available, depending on manufacturer recommendations.

"With that amount of mesh and film, the unit can wrap 224 bales in eight layers of plastic or up to 280 bales in six layers, so the Protec can run all day," says Mosel, adding that the Easy Load System (ELS™) makes mesh roll replacement a cinch. "Sensors automatically detect if film breaks or if a roll runs out, and the baler compensates to ensure that bales are always completely wrapped."

Innovative features maximize baling opportunities

The entire RB Series is engineered with productivity in mind. An operator can track bale formation, control cutter engagement and select knife banks all from the intuitive E-link Pro™ touch-screen monitor inside the tractor cab. The only reason to leave the seat would be to replenish net wrap and film.

Even a plugged pickup can be remedied from the cab thanks to the HydroFlex Control™ system with its hydraulically controlled floating floor.

"Should the baler get plugged, the operator can disengage the knives and lower the rear of the feed table floor from the in-cab monitor, allowing the crop to enter the bale chamber," Mosel explains. "Then, the machine can be re-engaged and baling can continue. There's no jumping out of the cab. No need to get hot, sweaty and dirty crawling under the baler."

The baler comes standard with a rear-mounted camera, providing the operator with a view of the wrapping table and the ability to monitor bale transfer, wrapping and release. Maintenance is simple. The baler features easy-to-access grease banks and an automatic chain lube system.

"The RB 4160P Protec combo baler is an ideal tool for producers who want to maximize the return on investment from their forages and provide their livestock with the absolute best feed," Mosel says. "It's an all-in-one solution for forage."

Profitable cow-calf operations begin with early calvers

Cows need to conceive and calve early to earn their keep.

University of Missouri Extension beef cow-calf specialist Jordan Thomas says managing for a short or even an "ultra-short" calving season should determine which cows get to stay on the farm. Late-conceiving cows should go to market.

Thomas and MU Extension beef nutrition specialist Eric Bailey are collaborating on a multiyear project to carry out an ultra-short calving season at MU's Southwest Research Center with the goal of managing for a calving season of only about 30 days. Thomas and Bailey argue that this can be done profitably through good reproductive management and strategic marketing of late-conceiving cows.

Don't feed low producers over winter

Cows that conceive late in the breeding season go on to calve late in the calving season. As a result, they wean younger, lighter-weight calves, Thomas says. Yet those cows cost just about the same amount to maintain all year long on the operation. Those costs really matter, especially when forage is in short supply, he says. Carrying low-productivity cows, especially through the winter months when feed costs are high, drags down profits.

When deciding if cows stay or go, begin by calculating carrying capacity of the farm or ranch. Matching carrying stocking rate with carrying capacity is essential if the goal is to maintain cows through the winter with lower supplementation or hay costs, says Thomas. Knowing the number of animal units that the land can support via grazing alone helps producers decide whether to destock or buy feed. MU Extension agronomists and livestock specialists can help producers estimate land's carrying capacity if needed.

"Most of us are used to thinking about destocking cows in drought conditions," Thomas says. "We carry low-productivity cows until we run out of feed. But really, we need to ask if something else is more profitable. Those cows are eating up a forage resource that we could use in a much more profitable way."

Beef up your forage management skills

Bailey argues that the spring flush of forage is a much more valuable resource than we realize. All too often in Missouri, that forage simply gets harvested as hay—and often as low-quality hay because spring weather prevented a timely hay harvest. Thomas says long hay-feeding seasons and long calving seasons seem to go together, and both lead to lower profits.

Good forage management allows a longer grazing season, feeding less hay and adding weight to calves after weaning. In more research at Southwest Research Center, Bailey is studying how to increase profits by running fewer cows and adding stocker calves during peak forage months.

"Grass sells a lot better wrapped in calf hide than in cow hide," Thomas says. "We need to allocate forage to profitable enterprises. If you consider the poor profits produced by later-conceiving, lower-productivity cows, it is clear they are not a good strategy for packaging that forage into calf value."

Treat your herd like your portfolio

The USDA's most recent National Animal Health Monitoring Survey shows that producers give a variety of reasons for culling. Old cows or those with bad teeth go first. Other top reasons include pregnancy status, temperament and drought. Those are good reasons to cull cows, Thomas says, but that doesn't mean obvious culls are the only cows that need to be marketed. "Late-conceiving cows just are not going to generate enough profit compared to early-conceiving cows or stockers," he says.

Data shows early calvers stay in the herd longer. Thomas supports a relatively short, well-managed breeding season but emphasizes the value of having a veterinarian perform a pregnancy examination to determine fetal age. Cows that conceived late will not only wean lighter-weight calves next year, they are also more likely to not become pregnant in the following year's breeding season.

Thomas says producers can think of their herds as an investment portfolio. Consider the input costs and the equity tied up in a cow and ask if that cow generates an acceptable return on investment. A hidden cost of cow-calf production is cow depreciation, or the decline in a cow's value from one year to the next. By strategically marketing later-conceiving cows, Thomas says, producers can help control some of that cost.

"Although it can feel like failure when we have to cull cows, we shouldn't look at strategically marketing late-conceiving cows as failing," Thomas says. "Look at it as an opportunity to free up equity that is tied up in animals that are poor investments. That is always a wise decision, especially when approaching the winter months without enough stockpiled forage. Late-conceiving females are just not a good investment."

Sen. Marshall calls on President Biden to respect private property rights of America's farmers and ranchers

U.S. Senator Roger Marshall, M.D. has sent a letter to President Biden asking him to reconsider his directive to conserve at least 30% of our private lands and waters by 2030, commonly known as 30 by 30. Farmers and ranchers will be a main target of this initiative, and these private landowners deserve an equitable and meaningful voice moving forward. In part, the letter reads:

"As you know, land ownership is a core right protected by the Constitution... Considering there is just under 900 million acres of agricultural land in the United States, I must assume that agriculture will be a target of your initiative... Farmers and ranchers are the original conservationists and generational farming is on the forefront of every producer's mind... I ask that you respect and acknowledge the private property rights of individuals so they may continue to have authority over what occurs on their property and have the freedom to produce an abundance of food, fuel, and fiber for the world. I urge you to ensure that this doesn't threaten productive land that will be necessary to feed an ever-growing world population."

CoBank: U.S. economy gathers momentum, policy decisions will reshape the future

The U.S. economy continues to outperform expectations as stimulus funds are fueling robust consumer spending. Consensus forecasts point to 7% GDP growth for 2021, the fastest rate of expansion since 1984. Inflation is inevitable, however, as the 2020 price declines will widen year-over-year inflation over the next two quarters, and new upward price pressure should push headline inflation above 3%.

The transition to a less COVID-restricted world has begun. But for the economy and rural industries, there will be no going back to pre-COVID conditions. A transformed policy environment and awakened commodity markets are making way for a whole new operating environment, according to the new Quarterly report from CoBank's Knowledge Exchange.

"The policy focus in Washington is shifting from crisis management to building for the future," said Dan Kowalski, vice president of CoBank's Knowledge Exchange division. "And the outcome of the president's infrastructure plan will have substantial implications for rural water, power and broadband providers. Hundreds of billions of dollars in funding would reshape these industries and intensify the current focus on climate resilience and social equity."

The cyclical turn in grain pricing, driven by strong demand and tight stocks, continued during the first quarter of 2021 and has picked up further gains ahead of spring planting. Accumulated grain exports to China have been very strong. While the backdrop for the grain and oilseed complex is positive, there are issues worth monitoring that could result in price volatility in the coming months. A recent surge of African Swine Fever in Asian countries could temporarily slow soybean demand.

Farm supply retailers are positioned to benefit from an exceptionally strong spring agronomy season, outpacing fall and spring 2020. Financially strong U.S. crop farmers should increase spending given a 3.1% increase in planted corn, soybean and wheat acres. Fertilizer prices rose 42% during Q1 and are now 96% above the trough level in May 2020. While much of the Midwest Corn Belt is free of drought, some areas of concern surfaced in late March.

The U.S. fuel ethanol sector has recovered, with production running near 90% of pre-COVID levels. The industry is adapting to new short-term and long-term realities, including changes in driving and work habits, policy directives on ethanol and fossil fuels and increased adoption of electric vehicles. Operating margins averaged near $0.10/gallon but rose sharply in March to above $0.25/gallon as fuel ethanol prices rose and natural gas prices fell.

U.S. chicken prices started 2021 on a high note, climbing over 20% in the first quarter. These prices offset the double-digit rate of feed cost inflation and brought spot margins well into positive territory. The counts of eggs set and chick placements are a leading indication that chicken production will remain at current levels, so chicken prices continue to look strong through the summer. Expected increases in vacation and business travel this summer will boost food service sales, benefiting the chicken sector.

U.S. beef demand has been incredibly strong in the first quarter despite the challenges in foodservice and the away-from-home dining sector. Strong demand and expectations for limited supply growth in the back half of 2021 have driven up cattle futures. The USDA expects beef production to decline by 3.5% in the second half of 2021, which has helped lift cattle prices nearly 15% above year-ago levels.

Packer margins remain elevated, but producers are expected to realize better margins in the second half of 2021.

Strong first quarter demand for pork, coupled with indications of limited supply growth, has lifted hog sector profitability to levels not seen in many years. Concerns over feed and other cost inflation has taken a back seat to optimism for another year of strong pork exports and robust domestic demand as U.S. consumer behavior slowly returns to normal.

China has slowed its hog herd rebuilding due to increased ASF cases this winter, helping drive the positive outlook for the remainder of the year. The pace of U.S. dairy exports started 2021 on a weaker note as exporters continue to struggle with trade logistics, specifically with the scarcity of containers, port congestion and rising transportation costs. Cheese and butter stocks continued their rapid ascent, climbing 5.4% and 16.8% year-over-year respectively, for February. U.S. milk production rose in January and again in February, giving dairy processors ample milk supplies for processing. Cow numbers in February reached the highest level in 30 years following months of ongoing expansion.

Combined cotton and rice planted acreage is expected to fall for the third consecutive year in the U.S. according to USDA's latest projections, as acres shift out of pima cotton and all classes of rice. The surge in upland cotton prices has blunted losses in its acreage. Last year's rally in refined sugarbeet prices also forestalled losses in sugarbeet acreage. The recovery in U.S. foodservice demand remains an unknown for both rice and sugar, while China remains critical for U.S. cotton demand.

Tree nut exports reached an all-time high with the peak shipping now drawing to a close. However, container shortages and port constraints are estimated to have delayed U.S. tree nut export shipments 10%-20% in the opening months of the year. The lack of movement could potentially translate into higher-than-expected tree nut inventories at the end of the marketing season. Drought conditions in California are raising concerns of limited water allocations in the forthcoming growing season.

February's polar vortex refocused attention on deficiencies in U.S. power, energy and water infrastructure, and how it is affected by climate change. Widespread failures in energy systems tend to negatively impact water systems. Consequently, any climate mitigation program in the U.S. must account for water and energy system dependencies. President Biden, delivering on his "Build Back Better" platform promise, has announced the American Jobs Plan — a $2 trillion infrastructure and economic modernization bill, which includes a major focus on climate change.

The recently enacted American Rescue Plan Act included $20 billion for broadband availability and affordability and the American Jobs Plan includes $100 billion to bridge the digital divide. Details are not finalized, but President Biden wants to prioritize funding for nonprofits, cooperatives and local governments. The ultimate outcome of the infrastructure plan will have substantial implications for rural water, power and broadband providers.

April 15 update on condition of Kansas wheat crop

The Kansas wheat crop is in relatively good shape for this time of year, but there are still a couple months until harvest, and a lot can change over that time.

With recent spring moisture, the crop is rated 16% poor to very poor, 29% fair and 55% good to excellent by USDA's National Agricultural Statistics Service (NASS) as of April 11.

The crop is about seven to ten days behind average. NASS reported that 29% of the crop is jointed, which is behind 36% for the five-year average.

Fall and Winter Conditions

At the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers (KAWG) board meeting on April 8, farmers from across the state reported that the condition of the wheat crop is variable, depending on planting date, and that most areas are finishing up with fertilizer applications. The earlier planted wheat is in good condition.

"Last fall in September, considerable precipitation allowed early planted wheat to emerge and have very good development during the fall," said Romulo Lollato, wheat production specialist with Kansas State University. However, he added, "October to mid-November was very dry."

"The late-planted wheat has been slow to grow and has low tiller counts," said KAWG president Justin Knopf.

Arctic temperatures in mid-February with extremely cold air temperatures, limited snow cover across the state and overall dry conditions caused some concern about winterkill.

"The promising thing was that the soil temperatures never got to single digit temperatures, and that is where the crown of the wheat was located at that time," said Lollato. "By late March and early April, we were better able to assess how the crop was faring. The small wheat in March that was later planted is showing some spring tillering and green leaves."

"Right now we're hopeful that not much area of winter wheat will be lost due to that potential for winterkill from the February cold spell."

March Precipitation

According to the Kansas State University March 2021 Ag Climate Update, "March was much wetter than normal, ranking as the fifth wettest March since 1895. This resulted in improving drought conditions across the state."

"The moisture, coupled with warmer temperatures, greatly aided winter wheat development." Read more at <http://climate.k-state.edu/ag/updates/>.

According to Lollato, this moisture really helped the crop recover from any potential injury it suffered over the winter, helped put fertilizer into the root zone, and is used efficiently by the crop for stem elongation.

"From now until heading is when the crop needs the largest amount of water," he said.

Watch Lollato's video update at https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=L\_Atfc-Gum6Y.

Disease Pressure

While the wheat crop is in overall good condition, there are some instances of disease pressure starting to show up. With the dry conditions last fall, a lot of volunteer wheat didn't get controlled. Instances of Wheat Streak Mosaic Virus are showing up in some unconventional locations, including central Kansas.

"We are seeing a higher number of WSM samples than what we typically see this time of year," said Kelsey Andersen Onofre, plant pathologist with Kansas State University. "Wheat Streak Mosaic is showing up early this year in western/west central and also central counties - Barton, McPherson and Saline counties. We're really keeping an eye on that right now."

Wheat Streak Mosaic Virus is transmitted by the wheat curl mite, which survives on volunteer wheat and other weedy host species and grasses. There is no treatment for WSMV, so the best way to manage it is after harvest by controlling host species.

"Fields that were infected right after emergence are showing bad symptoms of Wheat Streak Mosaic this time of year," said Onofre. "Those will cause the highest amount of yield loss. Wheat that's affected later in the season or has some resistance can have less yield loss."

Listen to Onofre's interview with Duane Toews at <https://ks wheat.com/file/wheat041221mp3>.

Wheat Tour

The Wheat Quality Council will host its annual Hard Winter Wheat Tour this year on May 17-20. Crop scouts will be evaluating the wheat and calculating potential yields using the NASS formula for this year. Sign up for updates from the tour and harvest reports on our website at <https://ks wheat.com/harvest>.

Replanning the Plan

By Miranda Reiman

We had one kid and an hour of church to get through. I'd load the diaper bag with Cheerios, fruit snacks and sippy cups. It was an effective strategy that kept my son entertained and occupied many a Sunday morning.

A few years with four kids age six and under, it began to look like we were serving a breakfast buffet in the back pew. One morning in particular, as

I heard wrappers rustling and kiddos munching, I realized it was time to re-evaluate my plan. What once worked beautifully was working no longer.

In the cattle business, it's just as easy for a brilliant strategy to become less ideal over time. Everything changes, eventually throwing its shade on even the brightest ideas.

One generational ranch found gold in the 1990s by selling their market-topping calves at weaning, only to buy plainer, cheaper and heavier weaned calves for stocker pastures. A decade later, they decided to keep the focus on their own calves and aim for the premium beef market.

In many jobs there's a regular evaluation protocol, with annual, bi-annual or quarterly introspection and external feedback. It gives people a chance to see what they're doing well and where they could improve.

Some cattlemen are involved in programs that offer similar check-ins, but reviewing what's working and what isn't doesn't have to be formal or even as predictable as the calendar.

Family business meetings can help, but re-evaluation can be as simple as giving the routine a second thought.

How have your genetics improved in the last few years? Perhaps there is an opportunity to alter stocking rates or sire selection in response to that directional change. If you've met a herd goal, you could set it higher or set a new one.

Have market shifts affected your final target? If so, maybe it's time to analyze your weaning program or selling strategy.

Each year, new technology enters the scene at a rapid pace. You can't implement it all, but if you never study potential benefits, you may miss out on possible advantages.

Long road trips or extra tractor-seat time often make great backdrops for pondering improvements. Other decisions require a good calculator or a spreadsheet full of useful data so you can crunch the numbers. Sometimes you might want to seek out expert advice from your genetics supplier, veterinarian or a marketing professional. Other times you just need to apply your own intuition.

As we added a couple more kids to the family it turned out that our switch to a "no eating in church" policy was a wise adjustment. My 24-year-old self probably wouldn't believe toddlers could possibly survive without using snacks as a crutch, but I've got plenty of real-world experience that says they do.

Is there anything you've accepted as status quo that could benefit from a little re-evaluation?

Next time in Black Ink® I will look to the future.

Bottle feeding calves

By Wendie Powell, livestock production agent, Wildcat Extension District

No doubt, most cattle producers have had to work out a situation with a calf that is no longer able to nurse its mama. Possibly the dam has died or it may be a rejected twin. Regardless, feeding a bottle multiple times a day can be rigorous at best.

A newborn calf that has been orphaned absolutely must receive colostrum. Calves are born with little defense against disease. True colostrum is only available from the first milking of a cow after calving, or commercially at feed and farm stores. This liquid gold provides a calf with its first and most important source of nutrients, and essential antibodies. Within the first hour of birth, a calf needs five to six pints of high-quality colostrum, and then again within the next twelve hours. The timing of colostrum intake is important because of the gut's ability to absorb the antibodies. Within six hours after birth, the stomach can only absorb two-thirds of the available antibodies. By 24 hours, the absorption capacity is reduced to 11 percent. Also, at 24 hours of age, digestive enzymes break down and digest all of the antibodies.

Day two and thereafter, calves can be fed twice a day with a calf bottle and calf nipple. Milk replacer powders are reconstituted with warm water and make an excellent and oftentimes economical liquid feed for baby calves. During the first three weeks of life, calves should be fed a milk replacer that contains all milk proteins made from dried skim milk or whey products. Milk replacers should contain 18-22 percent crude protein, 10-22 percent crude fat, and 0.5 percent crude fiber. These commercial milk replacers should be mixed and fed according to the manufacturer's directions.

For the first part of life, all calves function as simple-stomached or mono-gastric animals. At birth, the first three compartments of the stomach, the rumen, reticulum, and omasum, are undeveloped and do not aid in digestion. However, within four days, a calf can be introduced to calf starter and fresh clean drinking water; this introduction will allow the rumen to begin development. Calf starter is a very palatable feed, with adequate protein, minerals, vitamins and a coccidiostat.

During the first couple of weeks, calves will just nibble calf starter; only give about six ounces and remove the remaining feed daily. At three to four weeks of life, this intake will increase considerably. Feeding calves free-choice water will increase feed intake and weight gain. Hay should not be offered until calves are weaned from the bottle.

Calves can be weaned from milk when they are eating a pound and a half or two pounds of the calf starter, for at least three days in a row. This means that calves should not be weaned based on age but rather based on their feed intake. Some calves can be weaned at four weeks, but others may be up to ten weeks old. Calves can be weaned from milk either abruptly or gradually over three to seven days. After weaning, changes in the grain mix and housing should be made one at a time, over a two-week period.

A bottle-fed calf will not have the benefit of its dam's milk with continued support of immunity. So, it's critical to keep the calf in a clean environment. The calf will be vulnerable to diseases like coccidiosis and calf scours.

U.S. pork hamstrung by tariff, non-tariff trade barriers to Vietnam

Trade remains crucial to the continued success of the U.S. pork industry. In any given year, U.S. pork producers ship product to more than 100 countries. Exports contribute significantly to the bottom line of all U.S. pork producers, and last year, we exported nearly $8 billion of pork. Enhancing and expanding access to markets around the world is essential to pork producers.

While NPPC is focused on expanding market access to a number of countries, one of the more immediate export opportunities is Vietnam, a major pork-consuming nation dealing with African swine fever outbreaks in its domestic herd. The country is in need of affordable, reliable pork, yet unwarranted tariff and non-tariff barriers restrict the United States from supplying this major pork-consuming nation with affordable, high-quality pork.

Removal of Vietnam's unwarranted tariff and non-tariff barriers to U.S. pork is among NPPC's top priorities for its upcoming spring Legislative Action Conference. As producers meet virtually with their lawmakers in Washington, D.C., one key message will be to help expand market access to Vietnam, providing a key growth opportunity for the U.S. pork sector.

There is a tremendous opportunity for U.S. pork exports to Vietnam. Last year, the country only imported 25,000 million metric tons (MT) of U.S. pork, while Mexico, the second largest importer of U.S. pork by volume, imported 735,000 MT. Mexico may be geographically closer, yet Vietnam's approximately 96 million consumers annually consume 57 pounds of pork compared to 31 pounds consumed annually by Mexican consumers.

Vietnam did take an initial step forward last year in addressing the U.S. pork tariff disadvantage when, from July-December 2020, it temporarily reduced its Most Favored Nation (MFN) tariff rates from 15 percent to 10 percent for frozen U.S. pork products. As a result, U.S. pork exports doubled during that timeframe when compared to the first half of the year. The surge in exports during the tariff reprieve, coupled with Vietnam's growing population and cultural preference for high-quality pork, demonstrates that the United States is barely scratching the surface of its export potential to Vietnam.

NPPC will continue to seek enhanced market access to a country in need of affordable, reliable sources of pork. Additionally, NPPC continues to push for increased market access with the Philippines, Australia, India, South Africa, Indonesia, Thailand and Ecuador, among other countries.
