

Kansas Hay Market Report

Hay market prices for the week ending October 2 remain steady for alfalfa and grass hay and movement remains slow. Demand for grinder hay remains down at feed yards as they continue working through silage and corn chop. Producers were busy in the field harvesting ahead of the rain. Between September 30th and October 3rd most counties received at least a little precipitation. Rain totals ranged between 5.5 inches to a trace. According to the NASS Crop Progress Report, Pasture and range conditions rated 8% very poor, 17% poor, 38% fair, 35% good, and 2% excellent. According to the U.S. Drought Monitor for the week of September 28th, abnormally dry conditions (D0) increased to 34%, moderate drought (D1) increased to near 11%, and severe drought (D2) remained at 4%. If you have any extra hay to sell and/or need hay here in Kansas, use the services of the Internet Hay Exchange: www.hayexchange.com/ks.php. ** Prices below reflect the average price. # Farmer sentiment declines in Sept., inflation expectations jump

The Purdue University/CME Group Ag Economy Barometer declined in September, down 14 points to a reading of 124. With producers feeling less optimistic about both current conditions on their farming operations as well as their expectations for the future, this is the weakest farmer sentiment reading since July 2020 when the index stood at 118. The Index of Current Conditions declined 12 points to a reading of 140 and the Index of Future Expectations fell 16 points to a reading of 116. The Ag Economy Barometer is calculated each month from 400 U.S. agricultural producers' responses to a telephone survey. The previous month's survey was conducted Sept. 27-29.

The Farm Financial Performance Index was unchanged from the previous month with a reading of 110. However, examining the detailed responses reveals there was a shift among producers with regard to their farms' financial performance. In September, fewer farms said they expected their farm's financial performance to match last year's, while the percentages of producers expecting both worse and better financial performance rose.

"Although the combined responses left the Farm Financial Performance Index unchanged from a month earlier, the increasing divergence in expectations among respondents from August to September could reflect differences in how individual farms managed risk in a period of rapidly fluctuating commodity prices," said James Mintert, the barometer's principal investigator and director of Purdue University's Center for Commercial Agriculture.

The decline in farmer sentiment spilled over into the Farm Capital Investment Index, which declined ten points to a reading of 43, down 50% since the beginning of the year and the lowest investment index reading since April 2020. Fewer farmers this month said they planned to increase their machinery purchases than on the August survey as just 8% of respondents plan to increase purchases, down from 10% last month. In a follow-up question, over half (55%) of respondents reported that their farm machinery purchase plans have been impacted by low farm machinery inventories, likely contributing to weak sentiment regarding whether now is a good time to make large investments. Although plans for machinery purchases fell, producers' plans for new construction rose this month with 13% expecting to increase construction of grain bins and farm buildings, up from 8% in August.

about rising input costs rose sharply with over one-third of respondents saying they expect input prices to rise by more than 12% in the coming year, which is six times the average farm input inflation rate of the last decade. Inflation expectations were higher this month across the board with the percentage of respondents expecting input inflation to rise above 12% doubling since July with an increase to 34%, up from 21% last month.

Despite September's decline in farmer sentiment, farmers remain bullish about farmland values. The Short-Term and Long-Term Farmland Values Expectations Indices rose this month, with the long-term index hitting a record-high reading of 159, which is four points higher than the previous month. The short-term index rose nine points to 155, which is its third-highest reading since data collection began in 2015. Additionally, about one-half of corn/soybean growers continue to say they expect farmland cash rental rates to rise above 2021 levels in 2022. Among growers who expect cash rents to increase, 44% said they expect rental rates to rise from 5 to less than 10%, and three out of ten respondents indicated they expect rates to rise by 10% or more.

In early 2020, about 70% of producers expected agricultural exports to increase over the next five years. Since then, farmer expectations regarding future agricultural trade prospects have continued to weaken with only a few exceptions. September recorded the lowest percentage (37%) of growers expecting agricultural exports to increase since the question was first posed early last year. Concerns regarding the future of agricultural trade could be another factor behind weakness in the Future Expectations Index.

Each month, the Purdue Center for Commercial Agriculture provides a short video analysis of the barometer results. For even more information, check out the Purdue Commercial AgCast podcast. It includes a detailed breakdown of each month's barometer, in addition to a discussion of recent agricultural news that affects farmers.

The Ag Economy Barometer, Index of Current Conditions and Index of Future Expectations are available on the Bloomberg Terminal under the following ticker symbols: AGECBARO, AGECCURC and AGECF-TEX.

Livestock Field Day to be held in north central Kansas

Make plans to attend the Central Kansas Beef Summit on Wednesday, November 3rd, 2021. The event will be highlighted by a market outlook from Derrell Peel, Oklahoma State University Extension livestock marketing specialist, and a presentation on preg-checking and managing your opens from our very own K-State Research and Extension Beef Specialist, Dr. Sandy Johnson.

The field day, held in Phillipsburg, will be a collaboration among numerous K-State Research and Extension districts and will give producers a better chance to not only hear from industry leaders, but to also take part in conversation with one another.

In addition to the speakers, the program will offer breakout sessions where attendees can pick and choose which topics apply to them. This year's topics will be stock water considerations with state specialist, Ron Graber, weaning and calf health with Dr. Gregg Hanzlicek, DVM, and feed inventory with K-State Research and Extension, beef systems specialist Dr. Justin Waggoner.

RSVP today to make sure you get a plate of deli-icious roast beef meal from Third Street Bakery. Cost to attend is $10 if you register by October 27th, otherwise late registration is $15. For more information, or to register, visit www.postrock.ksu.edu. This event has been generously sponsored by several agribusinesses in collaboration with K-State Research and Extension Districts, Central KS, Cottonwood, Midway, Phillips/Rooks, Post Rock and Walnut Creek. Further questions can be directed to your local Extension agent.

Good udders make for good mothers

This graphic illustrates teat scoring.

Udder scoring is illustrated in the above graphic.

By Miranda Reiman
"Why are we doing this, Dad?"

That question came sometime during 2001 when Joe Elliott's teenage sons were helping him run a cow into a chute to milk her engorged udder.

"So you can remember why we're going to carry this cow off to the sale barn when this udder gets straightened out. We don't want to have to do this again," Elliott replied.

That was two decades ago, and as the seasoned Angus breeder recalls the story today, Elliott notes one of those now-grown "boys" is back home on the Adams, Tenn., farm. Today the father-son team assign udder and teat scores to every cow shortly after calving.

It's both a guard against increased labor and future problems in their own females, and part reputation management as a seed-stock supplier.

"If you sell a guy a bull with bad teats in his pedigree and he keeps replacements, he's not going to be happy if that gene pops out," Elliott says.

Initially, the breeder collected data on his own pass/fail scale. When the Angus Information Management Software (AIMS) began including it as a measure to track, he adopted that system.

"We don't have that many bad udders anymore. We just don't," he says, noting they treat poor udders like they do disposition problems. "We just don't keep bad ones around."

This summer, the American Angus Association added udder and teat scoring as optional fields in Angus Herd Improvement Records (AHIR®).

"It's all about making functional cows for the commercial cattleman," says Esther McCabe, director of performance programs. "You want to be able to make improvements for them, and udder scores are a step to creating trouble-free cows for your customers."

Teat and udder scoring how-to

In AHIR, just under the birth weight and calving ease fields, there are two separate measures: one for dam teat score and one for dam udder score.

"There is no optimal or right answer as long as the udder is functional and problem-free," McCabe says. "The most important thing is that the calf gets ample colostrum in them in the first few hours of life. We know that the antibodies from colostrum must be absorbed before the gut wall starts to close in order to provide passive immunity. The effects of colostrum follow the calf through life."

The Association has adopted a one-to-nine scale for teat size, where one is the largest and nine is the smallest. There is a similar one-to-nine scale for udder suspension score, with one being very pendulous and nine is very tight.

Eventually the current AIMS system will be converted to match, and the Association will help AIMS users who are interested in submitting historical scores.

"Teat size and udder suspension are highly correlated traits, and they tend to move in the same direction, but it's not a one-to-one correlation," McCabe says. "That's why they're being scored independently."

Elliott looks for a smaller teat — big enough for a calf to grab hold, but small enough to be able to suckle well right away — with good attachment and a tight udder. The more pendulous the bag, the more likely a calf can't empty it and they'll have problems, he says.

The scoring is based on the Beef Improvement

Federation (BIF) guidelines, but unique Angus sketches (see Figures 1 and 2) should help members identify what it looks like within the breed's population, she notes.

McCabe provides a few quick tips for scoring success:

Limit the number of people taking measures in a management group since it's subjective.

Score within 24 hours of calving.

Evaluate the worst combined quarter for udder suspension and teat size.

Making mamas that stay

Data helps cattlemen make decisions within their own herds. Elliott says they have real-world experience that provides proof: now very few females leave the herd because of their udders today compared to 20 years ago. It also helps the Angus breed continue to improve on the maternal traits it's known for.

The idea is to have enough records to develop a research expected progeny difference (EPD) and continue building a body of data that will inform future genetic tools down the road.

Those who submit data early will already be in a good routine, and "It's just

Take a look at this opportunity to purchase cropland with some recreational possibilities and a home located on the edge of Ramona, KS. This is a great opportunity to live in the country without all of the gravel roads. There are 155 total acres with approx. 110.87 ac currently planted to soybeans. The 2-story home was built in 1900 and offers 6 bedrooms, 1 bath and 1,750 sq ft of living space. With historically low interest rates and good commodity prices, now may be the right time to invest in land. Make your move to country living and invest in cropland to give you a return on your investment. New Generation Supplements

Cost Effective Protein Supplementation

The most cost effective forage a cow can consume is the forage she can harvest herself. However, protein often times becomes the most limiting nutrient for cattle grazing crop residues and dormant grass pastures. In these situations protein supplementation is required to efficiently harvest energy from these protein deficient forage-based diets.

Studies conducted at Kansas State University would illustrate that NGS protein supplements support both gain and efficiency when fed in conjunction with protein deficient forages. Find out more from your local New Generation Supplements dealer. Key Feeds.

Mixed up

Among crops, there is hybrid corn. In crossbred steers, there is hybrid vigor. Now there is another type of hybrid: Hybrid meetings.

Apparently that means a meeting which is held in person, but in which people can join by Zoom also. It is a mix of virtual and in-person. It is a hybrid – and it is a challenge.

Back in spring 2020, we got locked down altogether by stay-at-home orders. People quickly transitioned to remote work, masks, social distancing, and Zoom calls. “Pivot” became the theme of the time. As Operation Warp Speed brought vaccines to market, some face-to-face meetings began to resume. Then the Delta variant reared its ugly head.

Now the word “hybrid” might be the theme. There are lots of hybrid meetings. People are trying to meet in person, but some folks are reluctant or have various reasons for not doing so. For them, having a hybrid option to participate in a meeting virtually is a blessing. I know it has saved me a lot of windshield time.

The rules are confusing. State employees are required to wear masks in state facilities during the work week, while state university stadiums are packed with unmasked fans on the weekends. Does that make sense to anyone at all?

The 2021 Chisholm Trail Conference is trying to respond to current needs, so it is being held in hybrid format. On October 15, 2021, people can attend the one-day conference at Old Cowtown in Wichita, or they can join virtually. This is challenging because the meeting organizers need all the elements for a Zoom call, plus the sound and projection equipment for those present in person. It would be simpler if it was all one or the other, but those are not the times in which we find ourselves.

One good thing about Zoom is that it is possible to have excellent speakers from all over the country without having to pay travel expenses to bring them in. The Chisholm Trail Conference will include speakers from Washington D.C. to New Mexico. There will be state reports from Texas, Oklahoma and Kansas, and speakers from the Partnership for a National Trails System. Another speaker is the CEO of AIANTA, the American Indian Alaska Native Tourism Association.

There will be reports on the pending legislation that would designate the Chisholm and Western cattle trails as national historic trails while protecting private property rights. The conference is scheduled to hear from Congressional speakers as well as State Treasurer Lynn Rogers plus state historical commission and tourism officials. Congressmen Frank Lucas and Tom Cole will be recognized for their support of western history, rural tourism, and private property rights, with the same award as Senator Jerry Moran and Congressman Ron Estes were honored last year.

For those who attend in person, there will be excellent food from the Monarch Restaurant, a Drover's Gather sponsored by the National Drovers Hall of Fame, and a delicious steak dinner from the Ellsworth Steakhouse. Evening entertainment will include the Caldwell saloon girls and “Cowboy Mike.”

The agenda begins with a membership meeting at 10 a.m. The formal program begins at 11 a.m., and ends at 3:45 p.m. Registration is online for either virtual or face-to-face participation at www.chisholmtrailassn.com/chisholm-trail-conference. Anyone is welcome to join.

Maybe hybrid vigor will help the conference to grow.

State 4-H leader shares tips on raising resilient youth

Learning by doing has been the experience for generations of young people who have grown-up through the 4-H program. From crafting through woodworking to turning a creative lens on photography to caring for livestock from a young age, 4-H teaches many life lessons through hands-on experiences.

But sometimes there are lessons beyond the project that carry into life, said Wade Weber, state program leader for Kansas 4-H.

“There are skills that we need to practice in order to create a supportive environment for young people to help them see their value while also being able to handle adversity in a positive way,” Weber said.

To that end Weber sees three obstacles that adults and young people must learn to overcome. Stress and fatigue.

Mistrust of authority. Misinformation.

“These factors are corrosive to any organization,” Weber said.

To combat the negative influences, Weber names three individual opportunities to move ahead.

Focusing on self-care. Choosing to trust rather than be suspicious.

Engaging with others for a better understanding.

Weber said understanding these principles will help young people later in life to overcome the obstacles set before them.

He said: “Our mission is to help young people connect with resources and opportunities to help them grow in their capacity to see themselves as a learner, communicator, collaborator and ultimately a contributor to their local communities.”

Beginning again

By Morgan Boecker
Sometimes I write out a to-do list just to see what I accomplished.

Write news release. Wash the laundry. Order groceries. Check, done. What's next?

Life is about phases. Some occur just once and some are on repeat. We tend to spend a lot of time and energy trying to build momentum to summit the final arc of a cycle.

When it ends, space is created for something new to start, and off we go again.

Raising cattle is cyclical, too. Each year we face the same decisions between which bulls to use, heifers to keep and how to market calves. Even cattle prices ebb and flow at an expected pace year to year.

We're in a cycle many cattlemen have faced before: tough markets and bad weather. The drought of 2012 was hard in the central part of the country and today it's hard on the west.

Just like in 2012, the cow herd is plentiful, but inventory will begin to decline as drought forces ranchers to liquidate their herds. First, the bottom string of cows will be sold. If conditions don't improve, better quality cows may have to leave the herd.

That begins a tale as old as time: tighter supplies equal higher prices. That's something to look forward to, even though right now it may feel like things can't get any worse. The time waiting for things to get “better” is the hardest.

Still, the message we keep hearing is hold on, leverage is coming.

When it does, there may be time for growth and improvement. A fresh start often indicates opportunities.

Will you seek new, better genetics to increase the quality in your herd? Will you try something new, like backgrounding or retaining ownership of calves? Will you find time to analyze data you've been holding onto?

There's more demand for high-quality beef than ever before. There are more mouths to feed and consumers across the world are buying beef, an entire market ready to be served.

A new cycle is just beginning. Change often imitates similar motions as the past, but that doesn't mean history has to repeat itself. Maybe the to-do list just needs adjusted.

Read my bible. Talk with my family on the phone more often. Workout in the morning.

Check. But our job isn't over, it's just beginning again.

Heterosis

By Ron Wilson, Poet Lariat

Heterosis is a word not everybody knows.

It was in animal science class that I was first exposed.

(The term should not be confused with the word Halitosis,

That refers to bad breath when it hits the people's noses.)

Heterosis is a fancy term that sounds scientifically bigger,

To describe the outcome that my dad called “hybrid vigor.”

It's when the offspring from a cross-breeding exercise

Is superior to the parents in quality or size.

It shows easily in cattle when doing our cross-breeding,

To get the kind of steers that we think the market's needing.

Crossing certain breeds seems to cause genetic boost,

That exceeds the sire and dam in the qualities produced.

So cross-breeding can have value in the product of a herd,

Achieving hybrid vigor or that heterosis word. It reminds me of a joke, one that I used to hear,

Of a hired hand at a ranch that had a cross-bred steer.

“Why do you call him cross-bred?” the cowboy asked his boss.

“That's cause if you tried to get him bred, he would be really cross!”

Happy Trails!
