

Leadership Conference a learning experience for participants

Beef industry stakeholders from across the state participated in the Kansas Livestock Association (KLA) Leadership Conference January 24-25 in Topeka. The two-day educational seminar exposed attendees to services provided by KLA, advocacy training and the legislative process.

While at the Capitol, the group attended a Senate Agriculture and Natural Resources Committee meeting and heard from KLA lobbyists on how they protect member interests during the legislative process. Conference attendees also had a chance to meet with their respective legislators to discuss important beef and dairy industry issues.

As part of the conference, members took part in an interactive advocacy training session led by KLA staff and WIBW-Topeka farm broadcaster Greg Akagi. Participants were given an overview of the importance of being an industry advocate and the various media outlets available to help them reach consumers who want to know more about how and where their food is produced. Jamie Lindamood, a rancher from Eureka, shared with the group how she has implemented advocacy in her daily routine through social media and by inviting consumers to visit her ranch to better understand agriculture.

In addition, the Kansas Beef Council provided information on how checkoff dollars are used to promote beef, support important industry research and educate consumers about the benefits of including beef in a healthy diet.

This year's class brings the total number of graduates of the leadership training program to 714 since it was initiated in 1981. Sponsors of the biennial event included the Farm Credit Associations of Kansas, K•Coe Isom and the Kansas Livestock Foundation.

He is survived by his wife Marilyn, son Mike Jones DVM and wife Tresa (Vogelman) of Seneca, KS, daughter Lynn Hughes and husband Marc of Carney, OK, 4 grandchildren and 3 great grandchildren. Cremation has taken place and a celebration of his life will be held at a later date. Some producer-relevant issues lawmakers are wrangling with stem directly from the pandemic, while others continue their long-time simmer. These are other insights

“American Farm Bureau, with other trade associations, is working vehemently with USDA and FDA to try to come up with some kind of regulatory protocol that makes sense, that actually encourages development of this technology,” Bennett explained. “Even though you may disagree with the potential it has, it’s much better to have it in our own backyard than in another country where we don’t have the ability to control the outcomes.”

An advertisement for Grass & Grain. At the top left, a logo for "Grass & Grain" is enclosed in a rounded rectangle, with "Since 1972" written in small text above it. The word "YOUR" is prominently displayed in large, bold, white capital letters with a black drop shadow. Below it, the word "AUCTION" is written in a similar style, overlaid on a horizontal strip of images showing various pieces of farm equipment, including a large metal drum, a combine harvester, and a pickup truck. Below "AUCTION", the word "SOURCE" is written in large, bold, white capital letters with a black drop shadow. At the bottom, the text "Never miss a sale! Subscribe today!" is written in a bold, black, sans-serif font, followed by "Toll Free: 877-537-3816" in the same font.

Kansas Hay Market Report

Compared to the last report, hay market prices for the week ending January 29 remained steady for alfalfa and grass hay; movement remains slow. Much needed moisture arrived in western Kansas, in the form of snow. Snow totals ranged from 1 inch up to 23 inches. Another winter storm is predicted for this week with the southeast region expected to receive the higher totals. Although the snow brings its own problems, farmers will be glad for the precipitation as worries have centered around the current drought. According to the US Drought Monitor for the week of January 25th, the general theme was toward gradually worsening drought conditions, especially in Kansas and Nebraska. U.S. Department of Agriculture statistics from January 23 reflected some of the issues being faced by Kansas farmers, topsoil moisture supplies rated 39% very short, 38% short, 22% adequate, and 1% surplus, while subsoil moisture supplies rated 31% very short, 41% short, 28% adequate, and 0% surplus. Abnormally dry conditions (D0) increased to 26%, moderate drought (D1) decreased to 43%, severe drought (D2) increased to 12% and extreme drought (D3) increased to 5%. If you have any extra hay to sell and/or need hay here in Kansas, use the services of the Internet Hay Exchange: www.hayexchange.com/ks.php.

K-State beef cattle experts share the advantages of calving heifers before the mature cows
By Lisa Moser
Most would agree that watching a new life enter the world is a pretty amazing experience — whether that is a human or an animal. For a cow-calf producer, many calves can be born over the season, and oftentimes that means night checks on the females and being able to intervene quickly if the laboring animal has trouble. The ideal time to calve heifers was a discussion topic among the experts at the Kansas State University Beef Cattle Institute on a recent Cattle Chat podcast. “Heifers are going to require the greatest investment of labor at calving time so having them calve at the beginning of the season is going to have better outcomes because the people monitoring them are fresher and not worn down by a long calving season,” said veterinarian Brian Lubbers. Veterinarian Brad White agreed, adding: “It is important to calve heifers when you are fresh because you need to observe heifers closely to make sure things are going right.” “Not only do I like heifers calving ahead of the cows,” added veterinarian Bob Larson, “but I like them to be finished calving well ahead of the cows.” Larson’s reasoning is heifers that breed in the first 30-45 days of the breeding season are more likely to rebreed because of the recovery interval between calving and breeding. White agreed: “A successful heifer breeding program is realized when she gets bred back for her second calf.” Larson offered a breeding strategy for heifers. “By first breeding heifers with AI (artificial insemination), most of them should be able to get pregnant within the first 30 days of the season,” he said. Nutritionist Phillip Lancaster said by having veterinarians date the pregnancies, there is an opportunity to market the late-bred heifers for a greater dollar value than open heifers. Another advantage for calving heifers first relates to calf health, Lubbers

the E. coli/rotavirus vaccination prior to calving had as much as 20% lower incidence of scours among their calves. Clark encourages cow-calf producers to work closely with their herd veterinarian to determine protocols when vaccines before or at birth may be beneficial for herd health and newborn calf health.

Strategy 2: Continue to recognize that colostrum is essential — and the sooner the calf receives it, the more beneficial. Clark explains that prior to birth, the calf fetus is protected by six layers of placental tissue, but large antibodies cannot make it through these layers. Thus, when newborn calves are born, they have the unique ability for their intestine to grab the antibodies in colostrum and put it right into the animal's bloodstream instead of digesting it. However, those special cells begin to slough off as soon as the calf is born, de-

Newborn calf health strategies – three steps to focus on in first few weeks

By Kindra Gordon, field editor, Angus Beef Bulletin

Newborn calf health — and survival — can be improved with three important strategies, according to veterinarian Halden Clark with the University of Nebraska's Great Plains Veterinary Education Center. While addressing attendees at the 2021 Range Beef Cow Symposium this past November in Rapid City, S.D., Clark noted that calf death loss is highest in the first three weeks of age. Typically, scours are the biggest culprit.

Clark underscores that enhancing calf health can result in as much as $50,000 savings for an operation, so taking the time to take steps toward improvement has value. To combat pathogens and get newborn calves off to a good start, he offers these strategies.

Strategy 1: Use a vaccine program. Clark shares research from one study that indicated heifers receiving

Changes in mandatory lamb checkoff collections at auction markets announced

While the American Lamb Checkoff rate is not changing, how the mandatory assessments are collected for animals sold through “market agencies” is changing. The change applies to animals sold through auctions, including sale barns, video/online sales, and sales at shows and fairs.

These auctions will now collect both live weight assessments and per head (first handler) assessments as of January 21, 2022. However, the delayed enforcement date for submitting these assessments is March 22, 2022. This allows time for auctions to adjust their systems without a penalty for late payments. If a producer or feeder sells animals to a first handler and has already paid the checkoff at an auction, a refund will be issued. To receive a refund, documentation will be required from the time of sale.

The national lamb checkoff, directed by the American Lamb Board (ALB), is funded by mandatory assessments (check-off) paid by all segments of the sheep industry. By federal law, all sheep or lambs of any age, including ewes, rams, feeder and market lambs, breeding stock and cull animals, are subject to the national lamb checkoff assessment at the time of every sale. The mandatory American Lamb Checkoff assessment rates do not change. The live weight assessment is .007 cents per pound and the first handler assessment is 42 cents per head.

“It's important to remember that the sheep industry passed the mandatory American Lamb Checkoff so it would be equitable and beneficial for both those owning the lambs prior to slaughter and those who harvest the meat. That's why there are both live weight and per head assessments. And, these collections are only from U.S. born animals, allowing funds to specifically promote American Lamb. This does not change,” said ALB chairman Peter Camino, Buffalo, WY.

The changes had to go through a vigorous USDA process.

To fully understand the value of these changes, a refresher about this particular checkoff helps. When the mandatory American Lamb Checkoff was enacted in 2002, most lambs were marketed through traditional channels. The lamb industry has evolved considerably in the past 20 years, particularly the growth of non-traditional markets. For example, direct sales to consumers, ethnic and farmers' markets, and butcher shops now participate to a larger degree in the purchasing and processing of lamb and lamb products.

The 2002 Lamb Promotion, Research and Information Order mandates that live weight assessments be collected from producers or feeders and be forwarded to the next purchaser, if applicable. At the end of the process, the first handler (usually the processor) or exporter is responsible for submitting all live weight and per head assessments to the ALB. This is known as a pass-through method, with the bulk of collections made at the end of the process.

ALB listened to industry input, and it became clear that changes to the collection process were necessary. To maintain a fair and efficient mandatory American Lamb Checkoff for the entire industry and to reduce the burden on those collecting it, assessments need to be collected at the time of sale instead of the original pass-through method.

More information on how the mandatory American Lamb Checkoff works and how to pay or request refunds is at LambResourceCenter.com. The USDA Agricultural Marketing Service website on the lamb program is also a good resource.

Assessing dehydration in calves

By Lisa Moser
When you don't feel well, sometimes it is hard to stay properly hydrated and that can lead to serious health challenges. The same is true for young calves, said the experts at the Kansas State University Beef Cattle Institute during a recent Cattle Chat podcast discussion. "If a calf is nursing and shows a good attitude it is thriving, and if it is laying down – not nursing and looking depressed – then a producer needs to intervene. But it is the degrees of dehydration in between that can be hard to recognize," said veterinarian Brad White. He added that with young calves experiencing dehydration their health status can improve or deteriorate rapidly depending on the interventions. Veterinarian Brian Lubbers said there are three options for getting fluids into the calf's body: oral hydration, subcutaneous fluids and intravenous fluids. The best method will vary depending on the state of dehydration. Lubbers offered the following indicators to aid producers assessing hydration in young calves: Evaluate the calf's attitude and vigor. Dehydrated calves don't stand up quickly and show a reduced interest in nursing. Assess the suckle reflex by placing a finger in the calf's mouth and see how it responds. The suckle reflex will be strong in well-hydrated calves and weak in calves experiencing dehydration. Look at the eyeballs of the calf. As the calf becomes dehydrated the eyeballs pull inward and there is a gap between the eyelid surfaces and the eyeballs. Check the calf's skin tent by pulling up the skin and then releasing it. As dehydration progresses it will take more time for the skin to snap back into place. With a severely dehydrated calf, that skin will take ten seconds or more to return into place. Examine the mucous membranes by checking the calf's gums. They are moist in a normally hydrated calf and they will be sticky as the calf becomes dehydrated. Also, when you press on the membrane in a well-hydrated calf, it returns to the original color quickly, while it will be slower to return to its normal color if the calf is experiencing dehydration. This test, called a capillary refill time, does not work in calves with black-pigmented gums. Lubbers said that the best strategy for managing dehydration is to work with a veterinarian ahead of calving season to come up with a treatment plan because once calves get dehydrated intervention must happen quickly for the best possible outcome. He added: "Understanding the stage of dehydration in that calf is key in deciding the best treatment plan." For the full discussion, listen to the Cattle Chat podcast online.
