

Kansas Hay Market Report

Compared to the last report demand remained good, prices remained steady, and trade activity was moderate. Seems as though the hay market is currently in kind of a holding pattern, after the frenzy between August to December. Most report that they feel feed yards have enough feed, whether it is alfalfa, grass, silage, or distillers, to get to first cutting and most of the hay moving up and down the roads is previously purchased hay. There still is some alfalfa out there to buy but it is pretty hit or miss, and several folks are looking to purchase grass hay, to help get them through. A winter storm system moved across the state bringing much-needed rain and snow to many. Good news out of NOAA's Climate Prediction Center which indicates that we should be transitioning out of La Nina this spring and according to some experts, ample precipitation will arrive right around planting time. According to the U.S. Drought Monitor for January 17th, Kansas areas remain in extreme to exceptional drought with no changes to the categorical percentages. The categorical percent area for abnormally dry conditions(D0) remained at 15%, moderate drought (D1) remained at 16%, severe drought (D2) remained near 12%, extreme drought (D3) remained at 19%, and exceptional drought (D4) remained near 38.

NCBA, KLA file lawsuit to overturn lesser prairie chicken listing

NCBA, along with KLA, the Texas Cattle Feeders Association, Oklahoma Cattlemen's Association, New Mexico Cattle Growers' Association and Permian Basin Petroleum Association, has filed a notice of intent to sue the Department of the Interior and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service (FWS) over the listing of the lesser prairie chicken under the Endangered Species Act. This is the first step in court toward overturning the listing and revoking FWS's final rule for both the northern and southern distinct population segments (DPS). "The lesser prairie chicken only survives today because of the voluntary conservation efforts of ranchers," said NCBA Associate Director of Government Affairs Sigrid Johannes. "Science has proven repeatedly that healthy, diverse rangelands, like those cultivated by livestock grazing, are where the lesser prairie chicken thrives. There are numerous places where this listing goes seriously wrong and we are defending cattle producers against this overreaching, unscientific rule."

The listing was previously set to take effect at the end of January, but due to pressure on the Biden administration from NCBA and its allies in Congress, the rule was delayed by 60 days. The listing now will take effect March 27, 2023. The states included in the species' range are Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Colorado.

The lawsuit follows a letter submitted by NCBA to the secretary of the interior and FWS director requesting a delay of the effective date and flagging particular concerns with the 4(d) rule for the northern DPS, which includes Kansas. By permitting third parties to act as grazing authorities with the power to review and approve management plans within this segment, FWS has opened the door to activist groups having oversight of cattle grazing. However, under the rule, without these third-party-approved grazing management plans, cattle producers operating inside the species' range will be subject to a punitive degree of civil and criminal penalties for incidental take of the bird.

K-State experts share criteria for assessing udder quality

By Lisa Moser, K-State Research and Extension news service
As people age, sometimes their bodies break down and gravity takes hold in ways that they believe are not desirable. That can also be true in beef cattle when it comes to udder condition, say the experts at Kansas State University's Beef Cattle Institute. Speaking on a recent Cattle Chat podcast, the experts agreed that the time to evaluate the udder condition is at calving or shortly thereafter.

"The best time to assess udder condition is when the cows start nursing their calves because the udder is full of milk, and it is easy to see teat size and structure," said veterinarian Brad White.

White advises producers to keep a record regarding udder quality at calving that can be referred to later when culling decisions are being made.

"In the fall when you check for pregnancy the udder may look fine, so it is good to be able to refer to your notes to make sure there weren't any concerns with the udder condition during calving time," he said.

When assessing udder quality, veterinarian Brian Lubbers looks at the udder attachment, conformation and functionality.

"As the cow gets older, some of the ligaments that hold the udder in place will begin to break down causing the udder to hang low making it more susceptible to an injury," Lubbers said. "Also, producers need to look at the teat size to be sure that they are not abnormally large, making it difficult for the calf to nurse."

Lubbers also encouraged producers to observe the calves nursing to see how many quarters of the udder they can get milk from.

"If a cow has a severe case of mastitis, it may cause one or more of the quarters to no longer produce milk," Lubbers said, adding that this condition is caused by a bacterial infection in the mammary gland that impacts the teats.

Along with evaluating the udder, beef cattle nutritionist Phillip Lancaster encourages producers to look at the quality of the calf she is raising.

"If the cow has a high genetic milk potential but only three functioning quarters, she may be fine raising a calf," Lancaster said. "Look at the average weaning weight of the calves and see how her calf rates. As long as the calf is getting the nutrition they need, I'd keep her in the herd because she is making producers money after she passes the five-year mark."

Champions awarded in seventh annual American Gelbvieh Foundation Scale and Rail Contest and Steer Challenge

The results are in, and champions have been awarded in the 2022 American Gelbvieh Foundation (AGF) Scale and Rail Contest and Steer Challenge. The contest harvested 90 head from 15 participants, awarding $3,625 total in cash prizes and 21 banners sponsored by the AGF.

The steers had an excellent overall performance with an average daily gain of 4.12 pounds per head per day and a dry matter feed conversion of 6.19:1. The AGF extends a special thank you to Kinsley Feeders of Kinsley and Derek

Martin for hosting and supporting the contest.

The steers were harvested at National Beef in Dodge City and sold on the USPB grid. Thank you to Stuart Jarvis for donating the USPB delivery rights. The steers had an average hot carcass weight of 973 pounds with 92% having a yield grade of 1, 2, or 3, 79% grading USDA Prime or USDA Choice, and an overall average marbling score of 479.

The AGF continues to help advance the Gelbvieh breed through its support of research and development. For this reason, the AGF continues its Scale and Rail Contest and Steer Challenge. These two projects provide the information and funds necessary to generate data sets to advance Gelbvieh carcass merit. Together, these projects will solidify carcass merit within the Gelbvieh breed and place the cattle in a more competitive position in the beef industry through providing supplementary carcass data on Gelbvieh-influenced genetics. In addition to the data collected and knowledge gained from these projects, money raised will help to further develop more accurate tools for ranchers when selecting Gelbvieh and Balancer® genetics.

Scale and Rail Contest Results

The Scale and Rail Contest awarded $1,625 in cash prizes and 15 banners to outstanding participants in both the Gelbvieh and Balancer divisions.

Purina announces new feed additives for sow performance and piglet respiratory health

Purina Animal Nutrition is pleased to announce two new products formulated to support sow performance and reproductive efficiency and piglet respiratory health and immune function during the post-weaning period — Purina® EnduraSow™ feed additive and Purina® EnduraPig™ feed additive, respectively.

Optimize maternal performance

“Disease challenges can have long-lasting impacts on sow farm productivity,” says Erin Bryan, Ph.D., swine nutritionist with Purina Animal Nutrition. “For example, sick sows tend to eat less, and sows with low body condition at farrowing tend to lose additional weight during lactation. These sows are at risk of taking longer to breed back or requiring multiple services, which negatively impacts reproductive efficiency across the herd.”

EnduraSow™ feed additive is a low-inclusion feed additive that helps optimize sow productivity during a health challenge, as measured by more pigs weaned per sow per year in commercial trials. The additive also supports optimal sow farm efficiency by reducing the number of days from weaning to first service.

Help piglets thrive through change

EnduraPig™ feed additive helps prepare pigs' immune systems to address health challenges and supports pig growth performance throughout a respiratory challenge. This is especially important at weaning, when the immune protection from sow's milk declines before the pig's immune system fully matures.

“Weaned pigs are vulnerable to disease challenges at a time when they are facing additional stressors such as transportation and commingling,” says Bryan. “EnduraPig™ feed additive supports piglets' respiratory health and immune function during this critical period. This product can make an impact for pork producers because it promotes pig growth performance throughout a respiratory challenge.”

EnduraSow™ and EnduraPig™ feed additives are part of a portfolio of complete feeds and supplements for pigs in all performance phases from wean to finish.

Sen. Marshall announces Kansas farmers, ranchers eligible for updated USDA Emergency Relief Program

Kansas farmers and ranchers impacted by natural disasters in both 2020 and 2021 are now eligible for additional assistance through the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Energy Relief Program (ERP), Phase 2, U.S. Sen. Roger Marshall, M.D. announced recently. This assistance will help supplement losses in allowable gross revenue from crops that were substantially impacted by qualifying natural disaster or weather event.

"Farming is one of the biggest gambles you can take. So much of what is required to raise a successful crop is outside of a farmer's control," said Marshall. "For those farmers and landowners that were significantly impacted by weather events, we want to ensure they can continue farming and raising crops in the years to come."

Farmers and landowners in the following counties are eligible for ERP payments for 2020, 2021 or both: Cheyenne County, Clark County, Clay County, Comanche County, Decatur County, Gove County, Graham County, Grant County, Greeley County, Hamilton County, Kearny County, Logan County,

Marshall County, Meade County, Morton County, Norton County, Phillips County, Rawlins County, Scott County, Sheridan County, Sherman County, Stanton County, Stevens County, Thomas County, Wallace County, Washington County, Wichita County, Decatur County, Finney County, Gray County, Haskell County, Jewell County, Seward County, Smith County.

Producers in these counties should contact their Farm Services Agency Service Center to apply. All payments through the ERP program come with the requirement of future crop insurance protection.

Plant-based products can harbor the same pathogens as meat, USDA says

The growth of plant-based alternatives is due in part to a belief that plant-based products are healthier than animal meat and less susceptible to pathogens like E. coli, Salmonella and others. However, plant-based products can harbor the same pathogens as real meat, according to Agricultural Research Service (ARS) scientists.

Anna Porto-Fett, scientist at the ARS Eastern Regional Research Center's (ERRC) Food Safety and Intervention Technologies Research unit, says many consumers believe plant-based burgers are not raw since they contain plant material, and some plants can be eaten raw. "In reality, plants often harbor high levels of foodborne pathogens and, as such, plant-based burgers should be considered and handled just like raw ground beef, for

Pork exports peak to record-setting numbers

The November exports of U.S. pork were the largest of 2022 in both volume and value, according to data released by USDA and compiled by the U.S. Meat Export Federation (USMEF).

Pork exports to Mexico set another value record in November, topping $200 million for the second consecutive month, and volume was record-large at 87,809 mt.

Overall results were also bolstered by excellent growth in variety meat exports, which were up more than 25% year-over-year at just over 50,000 mt, valued at $116.9 million – up 21% and the fourth highest on record, driven by growth to China and Mexico.

NPB also analyzes trade data YTD compared to the five-year averages and with and without China – an important perspective as the world looks to normalize trade trends after a global pandemic.

2022 YTD compared to the Five Year Average (Jan-Aug)

- With China
- +1% in volume, +8% in value
- Without China
- +3% in volume, +17% in value
- Well performing markets – top ten trading partners (value)
- Mexico, Japan, Canada, Colombia, Dominican Republic, Guatemala
- Declining markets – top ten trading partners (value)

Schwieterman Market Outlook

A marketing commentary by Bret Crotts

The March corn started last week under pressure, but found support at the 50-day moving average, then managed to post four consecutive higher highs on the chart. The March contract is now in position to challenge the post report high made on 18th. Taking out that level would give us a fresh multi-month high and put the bulls in control of the market.

While the March corn in on the verge of a breakout to the upside, the opposite is the case for the new crop December contract, which looks like it may be on the verge of a new multi-month low. We have seen about two months of bull spreading in the corn market and the March contract is now 96 cents over the December. The old crop contracts are still being supported by the strong basis and the recent improvements in the export market, while the fears of expanded acreage and a big crop weigh on the new crop. Last year the March – December spread got out to $1.40, and it is certainly conceivable that we could see something similar this year.

The March KW futures made the first close above the 50-day moving average since November 15th, which looks promising on the chart. Funds are net short wheat, and this is a good technical reason to start covering those positions. The next major technical hurdle is the $8.95 area, which we could see a test of in the next week or so.

Fundamentally, drought conditions have improved a little in parts of the HRW Belt, but so have export sales. Demand has been lacking for quite a while, so the recent improvement was much needed. If we could sell 15 million bushels or more a week like we have been, USDA would be forced to increase the export estimate and cut ending stocks. Since the new crop isn't going to be big, it would mean we have another year of relatively tight supplies. As long as there is war in Ukraine, our supplies aren't growing, and we have decent demand, the wheat market will remain on solid footing.

Soybeans futures keep being whipped around by the ever changing headlines. Between worrying about Argentine weather, which has improved greatly, and export sales, which were supposed to dry up, but definitely haven't, traders don't know which way to go. The March soybean chart now either suggests a new contract high is imminent, or we are working on a head and shoulders top. The picture is far from clear, but with a couple more weeks of big export sales, and the Chinese economy perhaps really opening up, the bulls may have the advantage for the time being. The bears need the export sales to stop soon if they are going to get the market to roll over.

April live cattle were higher for the week, but Thursday's sell off really killed the upward momentum. Our showlist numbers were much tighter than the week prior and year ago levels, which gave us some hope the cash market would be firmer, but that was not the case, so we lacked a big incentive for the futures to shoot higher. The charts suggest we have a chance at the April making a new contract high, but we need help from the cash market.

Feeder cattle were strong on Monday when the corn was weak, but after that was a sideways, choppy, affair. March feeders stalled out just below the 50-day moving average, which looks ominous, and the August contract stalled out just below the contract highs. Consider bear spreading this market.
